POETIC CONFIGURATIONS
Essays in Literary Theory and Criticism

In the vast diversity of Western civilisation, poetry has traditions both national and international that span three millennia. To write a coherent critical history of even just lyric poetry would be perhaps beyond human powers, but in his essays Lowry Nelson finds it possible to take soundings — in great epochs of inventiveness and of changing sensibility, in the extremes of expressivity, in the reader's varying fictive role — while setting in appropriate contexts works of such poets as Horace, the early Trobador, St John of the Cross, Shakespeare, Wordsworth, Leopardi, Baudelaire, and Vyacheslav Ivanov.

It won't take you long to interpret and comprehend the suggestion put forward in the title of the exhibition. Indeed, the world of Dhall Ai-Mamoon caught in clarity and not clarity. The Dhall of '94, when he held his 2nd solo, seems to be going through some kind of spiritual turmoil. His present show is a testimony to his confused soul. But you won't make any mistake to find the same antique Dhall, the colourist.
