Saint-Etienne on guard

SAINT-ETIENNE, France June 29 (AFP/ Internet): Saint-Etienne began pulling down the shutters on Monday as thousands of England fans poured in for Tuesday's World Cup clash with Argentina.

Local authorities have ruled that city-centre bars and restaurants can stay open and keep serving drinks until 11 pm, in contrast to the alcohol bans adopted when England played first round games in Toulouse and Lens.

But despite ringing up record takings last week when Scotland, the Netherlands and Mexico played in first round matches here, many establishments have opted to close dur-ing the final World Cup game in the city because of fears of hooligan violence.

player. He's "the phenomenon," the most talented striker of a generation, twice voted FIFA player-of-the-year. For him, the bar is higher.

Of course, opponents also expect great things from the 21 year-old striker. Against Chile, Ronaldo had a hard time keeping his feet against a defence that barely let him breathe.

But he turned it to his advantage when he collided with goalie Nelson Tapia and French referee Marc Batta whistled a penalty. Ronaldo took the shot himself for the score.

In the second period, he ranged all over the field, scoring his second goal on a pass from Cafu and bouncing two shots off the post and the cross-

What's eating Roberto Carlos?

PARIS, June 29 (AFP/ Internet): Brazilian Roberto Carlos, one of the most feared free-kick artists in the world, has been reduced to an also-ran by the revolutionary new football being used in the World Cup.

The 28-year-old Real Madrid defender is furious over the ball introduced by adidas for France

'This new adidas ball has ruined years of practice as far as I am concerned," he fumed. Roberto Carlos scored what many pundits consider the greatest free kick goal ever during last year's Le Tournoi in France.

The Brazilian transfixed the world with a swerving kick that left French goalkeeper Fabien Barthez staring in amazement. Everyone was convinced that his shot over the French wall was going well wide of the post until, like a scud missile, it suddenly curled sharp left and flashed into the back of the net before Barthez had time to re-

Champagne corks flew as they upset the favoured Africans to become surprise quarterfinalists.

Germany were on the receiving end in the 1992 final when gatecrashers Denmark had a back door entry after the pullout of Yugoslavia and went all the way to the Euro '92 title.

But partypoopers abound in World Cup history, just look at Bulgaria four years ago.

They were not going to the 1994 fournament unfli Emil Kostadinov scored with the last kick of a qualifying game against France, and when they got to the USA they went all the way to the semifinals after losing their first match to Nigeria.

In those same championships, Sweden were another surprise semifinalist, beating Argentina and Romania on the way to a defeat by Brazil, but third spot after beating Bul-Denmark's win last night was some consolation for the 5defeat they suffered against Spain in 1986 after playing some fabulously fluent football in their first three matches.

Spain got no further as they ran up against a Jan Ceulemans-inspired Belgium, who had already surprisingly knocked out a talent-packed Soviet side. But in the semifinals the Belgians lost to an Argentinian team with Diego Maradona at his very peak.

East Germany caused a shock to hosts (West) Germany in 1974 when a political victory was earned by the eastern half of a divided nation.

However, west Germany bounced back from a goal down in the final to beat Johan Cruyff's Holland to become the only champions to have lost a first round match.

Maldini venerates Vieri

SENLIS, France, June 29 (AFP/ Internet): Italy captain Paolo Maldini said on Monday that World Cup ace Christian Vieri will be worth more than the home crowd when they face France in the quarter-finals. The two sides meet in Paris on Friday for a place in the quarter-finals, and Maldini reckoned it was better to have one Vieri, the tournament's top scorer, than 80,000 home fans in the stands. "It's going to be a difficult game... and obviously most of the crowd will be supporting France," he said. "I thought the team looked very good in the opening matches, although they seemed a bit slow against Paraguay. "But they are a solid side, and they have the results to prove it. I think their strong point is the defence, and they have a midfield which also gives them plenty of cover too. He went on: "Playing at them draw 2-2 with Norway. "Morocco outplayed Norway but they were simply overawed by Brazil, as if they just wanted to say 'we played against Brazil in the World Cup' when in fact they could well have caused them problems," he added. Nigeria's lack of defensive discipline was as evident on Sunday as on a memorable night in Naples eight years ago when Cameroon slid out to two Gary

Lineker penalties to let England off the hook. In all fairness to the other African sides present at France 98, it was never to be expected that any of them would progress beyond the group phase. South Africa are still well away from the top of the learning curve. But they still came away with two creditable draws their debut.

Wanted: A genuine striker

PARIS, June 29 (Reuters): France scored most goals in the first stage of the World Cup, but their inability to convert chances remains the greatest threat to their World Cup chances.

The host country struggled to find a way past a brave. Paraguayan defence on Sunday and cannot afford to show such a lack of ideas against Italy in Friday's quarterfinal.

"We kept trying but we lacked clear heads and confidence," coach Aime Jacquet said after France's 1-0 victory in Lens.

"An early goal would have made life easier for us," said Jacquet who had to live through 114 painful minutes before a Golden Goal by defender Lau-rent Blanc ended the agony. "We need more efficiency in attack to avoid a repeat of that type of scenario." After enjoying a relatively smooth passage to the knockout stages and scoring nine goals. France showed against Paraguay's compact defence that they badly lacked a natural goalscorer like Italy's Christian Vieri or Argentine Gabriel Batistuta. While being blessed with abundant talent in defence and midfield, Jacquet has a real problem when it comes to strikers and the injury suffered by Thierry Henry in Sunday's match will make life even more difficult. The 20-year-old Henry —

France's top scorer in the tournament with three goals — came closest six minutes before halftime when he hit the far post. If Vieri had been given the same chance, though, there is little doubt he would have scored.

The promising Monaco striker had to leave the pitch on a stretcher with a sprained left ankle which makes him doubtful for the quarterfinal against

"It's a nuisance," said Jacquet, already without Christophe Dugarry, who is nursing a torn right thigh muscle sustained in France's 4-0 demolition of Saudi Arabia in their second match.

Dugarry could be fit for the semifinals, if France get that far. But for the Italy match, Jacquet seems to have no other option than to pair youngster David Trezeguet with Stephane Guivarc'h. Trezeguet showed very little on Sunday until feeding Blanc for his Golden Goal and Guivarc'h, who came on in the 77th minute, again failed to make an impact. Captain Didier Deschamps is aware France lack a poacher who can save them by converting a half chance but insisted there are enough players in the squad capable of scoring goals. "Okay, we've got a problem up front but there is plenty of talent in the team and many of us can score," said the defensive midfielder. The return of playmaker Zinedine Zidane against Italy will undoubtedly help the flow of chances up front.

"Zi-Zou is very important to us and we missed him a lot," said Deschamps. "He can give us that little something and with him around, it's easier to score." Zidane was suspended for two games for treading on an opponent in the match against Saudi Arabia. "He was ever so happy after we beat Paraguay," said Jacquet. "He was close to tears. Now he's impatient to resume playing. He knows we count on him to help us reach new

Return of Zidane

PARIS, June 29 (AFP/ Internet): Zinedine Zidane has purged his two-match suspension, which is news that will have warmed the hearts of France's football-watching public and boosted the team.

Zidane, who comes back into the French team in the World Cup semi-finals against Italy on Friday, is an almost indispensable player in the side and coach Aime Jacquet agreed his absence against Paraguay was Zidane was sent off in the 70th minute in France's 4-0 win over Saudi Arabia game for a half-hearted stamp on skipper Fuad Amin. Though most observers thought it was not a malicious action intended to injure, it was nevertheless an irresponsible reflex and the referee had little option but to send the player off. Fortunately for France they were already on the way to qualifying during that match and the first match without Zidane, their final 2-1 group victory over Denmark, had nothing riding on it. However everything was at stake in the match against Paraguay as the tournament went into knockout mode with the winners taking all and the losers going home. Zidane ran onto the pitch and waved his arms in triumph following Blanc's 114th minute golden goal, the first in World Cup history. Zidane, often undemonstrative off the pitch in contrast to his on-pitch wizardry, showed a sudden release of emotion once

France and had got through. French coach Aime Jacquet said afterwards that Zidane would have been the happiest member of the squad following victory. The balding Zidane is an almost indispensable player in the side.

Jacquet summed up what the player meant to the team with a tale which harked back to his own playing days with St Etienne and a player called Rachid Mekloufi, who, like Zidane was number 10.

"Rachid was my provider and every now and again he would set me up to score. But when Mekloufi left St Etienne, nobody wanted to wear his shirt. So I took it without knowing what I would do with it but you see Mekloufi was irreplaceable. "And like Mekloufi, Zidane is also irreplaceable in his number 10 shirt. Whoever took Zidane's place would be put in an embarrassing situation because how could he live up to such class?" The number 10 is a legendary number in football. Diego Maradona, Pele, Zico were simply legends. This World Cup has impressive number 10s in Ariel Ortegao of Argentina, Nigeria's Jay-Jay

Bulgaria in the first half Brazil's Rivelino and Italy' injury-hampered Alessandro Del Zidane is the spark which ignites the engine of France's undoubted talent of stars who play in some of the world's top leagues, though a world class goal scorer is still missing from the squad though Trezeguet

could make up for it.

Jacquet said on Zidane following victory over Paraguay: "He's the team leader, playmaker and he will be the happiest of the entire squad that the team has won. And we hope he will come back and make a real difference and carry the French team forward."

Really?

LONDON, June 29: Diego Maradona has reportedly apologised for his infamous "Hand of God" goal scored against England in the World Cup 12 years ago, according to British tabloid newspaper the News of the World, reports Reuters. It quotes Maradona as saying: "I realise that goal should not have stood and I am sorry for what happened. "I did not want to offend anyone when I scored that goal.

MONACO, France, June 29 (AFP): No player better sums up the mood of renewed purpose and camaraderie in the Holland squad than midfielder Edgar Davids, the high-school dropout who now only reads works of philosophy. The 25-year-old midfielder, once described by former Ajax coach Louis van Gaal as 'my little pitbull' established a reputation for trouble-making - second to no-one even in the famously divisive world of Dutch football.

"He could start a row in an empty dressing room," one former teammate said of the combative Juventus star. Davids' international career seemed to be over barely after it had started when he was sensationally kicked out of Holland's Euro '96 squad as the simmering tensions in the Dutch camp boiled over into open hostility. The dreadlocked former Ajax ace accused coach Guus Hiddink of favouring while players over those from the Dutch West Indies or Surinam and was promptly told to pack his bags and head for the airport check-in.

archrivals Juyentus - and since then he has re-established himself as one of the best midfielders in Serie A after a sparkling season for the Italian champions.

while his teammates Patrick Kluivert, Clarence Seedorf, Michael Reiziger and Aron Winter all backed his recall. Davids did not play in Holland's first Group E game
