Newspaper war of words with judges turns nasty in Hong Kong

HONG KONG, July 18: Punctures were thrown outside Hong Kong's high court in June in the latest flare-up of a dispute that has pitted the local news media against the judiciary.

According to Gemini News Service, scuffles broke out during the final stages of a trial of a newspaper executive who was convicted of criminal contempt relating to scathing attacks on judges which had been published in his newspaper.

Clashes involving newspaper workers left one press photographer injured, while police arrested another man for assault.

The case is symptomatic of the deteriorating relationship between the media and the judiciary in Hong Kong. Links have been strained since the former British colony reverted to Chinese sovereignty last year amid fears that its relatively free press would be shackled by its new communist masters.

Wong Yeung-ng, a former chief editor of the Oriental Press group, was convicted of criminal contempt by the Court of First Instance over a long-running confrontation between the newspaper group and the judiciary.

The Oriental Daily News, the flagship title of Oriental Press and one of the territory's most popular daily journals, ran a strongly worded campaign against the judiciary following what it claimed were unjust legal rulings against it.

The newspaper's campaign included strident editorials that described some judges as "swinish".

In convicting Wong, who is now company controller of Oriental Press, the judges declared the newspaper group guilty of undermining faith in the justice system.

The decision was Hong Kong's first successful prosecution for criminal contempt and was based on charges that Wong had "scandalised the court" and "interfered with the administration of justice as a continuing process".

Wong faces a possible prison sentence and his company faces a huge legal bill if the prosecution's costs are awarded against it.

The decision against Oriental Press has prompted the group's chairman, Ma Ching-kwan, to resign his post, saying he would now be seeking opportunities abroad. "I think that the present situation in Hong Kong could not allow me to further develop, therefore I have to find somewhere else," he said.

He is believed to be planning to move to Australia, where he has extensive property interests. Ma, a dynamic and often colourful figure in the Hong Kong media industry for the past decade, has been replaced as company chairman by his brother, Ma Ching-fat.

The Oriental Daily's confrontation with the judiciary reached a head earlier this year when the newspaper assigned a team of photographers to shadow Justice Gerald Godfrey. This was after the judge had rejected a bid by Oriental Press to take a rival newspaper, Apple Daily, to the Court of Final Appeal over a dispute involving the reproduction of photographs of a pop star.

A key issue in the case involved the role of photographers, and the Oriental Daily said it wanted Justice Godfrey to understand what the term paparazzi meant.

The paper also attacked members of Hong Kong's Obscene Articles Tribunal after a ruling was made against the journal. It published an editorial in which it called tribunal members "mangy yellow-skinned dogs".

A further example of the vituperation was the case of 49 Chinese men, women held in Japan.

TOKYO, July 18: Japanese police today arrested 49 Chinese men and women on suspicion of illegally entering the country, reports AFP.

Chiba prefectural police found 45 men and two women hiding in an abandoned warehouse in Matsudo, some 20 kilometers (12 miles) northeast of Tokyo, officials said.

The suspects, ranging in age from 16 to 45, told police they came from Fujian province.

The prefectural police are investigating whether any other members had fled the warehouse before police arrived on the scene.

Last month police arrested 30 suspected illegal immigrants from China in the prefecture.

While the Oriental Daily has been at the forefront of the media's confrontation with the courts, it is not the only local newspaper to criticise judges. The respected English-language South China Morning Post ran a campaign last year against some judges' practice of restricting media access to certain trials, including some involving prominent people.

The Chinese-language press has consistently complained that Hong Kong's judiciary has retained much of its colonial character. Despite the transfer of sovereignty and a "localisation" policy of promoting indigenous inhabitants to more senior positions, many of the judges are still British or European from other Commonwealth countries. The Oriental Daily referred to them as "swinish white-skinned judges" in one of its attacks.

Fears that Beijing would impose restrictions on the media have so far proved groundless. The authorities have been tolerant of Hong Kong media reports critical of the Chinese leadership and its policies on Tibet and Taiwan.

PHNOM PENH, July 18: The Khmer Rouge have made a murderous return to Cambodian politics, attacking a convoy of election workers with automatic weapons and killing two people in an effort to disrupt parliamentary elections on July 26, officials said Saturday, reports AP.

The guerrilla movement had been considered all but crushed and unable to carry out threats to sow election terror following the fall of their last stronghold to government troops in April, which was accompanied by the death of long-time leader Pol Pot. Despite the new attack, however, they are unlikely to have much impact on the balloting.

About five guerrillas opened fire on the election officials Friday raid as their convoy travelled between Anlong Veng, the captured Khmer Rouge base, and Trapeang Prasat, about 16 km east, regional military chief Maj. Gen. Chea Mann said.

A total of 1,02463 hectares of land would be brought under aman cultivation in ten thanas under Netrakona district this year, reports BSS.

According to an official source, of the total area, 46,735 hectares would be brought under high yielding variety and 55,728 hectares under local variety of the paddy.

The production target of the crop has been fixed at 1,80,385 tonnes, the official source said.

Seminar on business journalism held

A three-day seminar on "Economics and Business Journalism" organised by the Economic Development Institute of the World Bank, the World Bank Dhaka office in collaboration with Bangladesh Centre for Development, Journalism and Communication, was held recently at the BRAC Centre for Development Management, Rajendrapur, Gazipur, says a press release.

Twenty-four senior economic reporters from eighteen leading national newspapers and news agencies attended the seminar. Tim Carrington from the Economic Institute of the World Bank and Swaminathan Aiyar from the Economic Times of India conducted the seminar. Dr Subrata S Dhar and Dr Zahid Hossain from the World Bank Dhaka Office and Naveemul Islam Khan, the Executive Director of Bangladesh Centre for Development, Journalism and Communication, also conducted some sessions.

The other local resource persons were Dr Wahuddin Mahmud, Professor of the Department of Economics of Dhaka University, Barrister Manzur Hasan, Executive Director, Transparency International Bangladesh, Tajul Islam, Director of BRAC and Farid Hossain, Correspondent of the Associated Press.

Fighting erupts on Kosovo's border with Albania

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia, July 18: Fighting raged Saturday on Kosovo's border with Albania, where Serb forces shelled villages on a suspected gun-running route for ethnic Albanian guerrillas. Albanian border guards reported many dead and wounded, reports AP.

Away from the border, ethnic Albanian fighters seeking to tear the province of Kosovo away from Serbia were reportedly launching their own attack on Serb security forces controlling a mostly ethnic Albanian town.

While the Serb assault seemed aimed at further disrupting arms smuggling routes into Kosovo, the attack by the Kosovo Liberation Army, which is estimated to control up to 40 per cent of the province, appeared to be an attempt to grab more territory.

Before ending Saturday afternoon, the border artillery barrage sent some as far as half a kilometre (hundreds of yards) inside Albanian territory, spokesmen for Albania's border police said.

Spokesman Artan Blizha of the Albanian interior ministry, which controls the border police, said border guards had seen many killed and wounded by the shelling of the area around the village of Padesh. He said guards could see dead bodies on the Kosovo side but offered no casualty counts.

Padesh served as the main route for about 13,000 Kosovo refugees that crossed the border into Albania in June, escaping a Serb attack on their villages. It is also believed used by the KLA to smuggle guns and ammunition from northern Albania into Kosovo, where ethnic Albanians outnumber Serbs 9-to-1.

The fighting in the Padesh region began late Friday ebbed overnight, then resumed after day break. Blizha said that 14 wounded KLA members had crossed into Albania to escape the shelling.

The ethnic Albanian Kosovo Information Center said at least one person was reported killed Friday in the village of Zun, near the border fighting.

In Pristina, British Embassy officials said they were searching for a British aid worker feared missing in western Kosovo, possibly in the border area.

Sally Becker, known as the Angel of Mostar for her humanitarian efforts in that Bosnian city during the war, was reported missing Thursday, said the officials. She heads a small humanitarian organization called Operation Angel.

As the Serb border shelling ceased, the KLA assault in Kosovo's interior appeared to grow in ferocity. It was centered on Orahovac, about 50 kilometres (30 miles) southwest of Pristina, capital of the province.

Reporting on the fighting, the Kosovo Information Center could not say whether Serb police controlling the mostly ethnic-Albanian town of 20,000 might have been forced to cede some ground.

But the Serbian Media Center in Pristina described the Orahovac fighting as a "dramatic" KLA assault "from several directions" that sent civilians streaming from the area. It said more than 40 Serb civilians had been kidnapped by ethnic Albanian fighters. Telephone lines went dead Saturday morning, it said.

Serbia is the largest of the two republics remaining in Yugoslavia and dominates the Yugoslav federation. The Yugoslav, and Serbian, five-month crackdown on the secessionist KLA has triggered a backlash in Kosovo not only against the government but also against Kosovo ethnic Albanian leader Ibrahim Rugova, whose commitment to non-violence has failed to end the bloodshed or win self-rule. The result has been converts to the KLA.

A mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe was meeting with Rugova on Saturday in its attempts to end the violence.

Death toll may rise to 250 Tidal wave sweeps away villages in PNG: 70 killed

CANBERRA, July 18: A tidal wave swept away villages in a heavily populated area of northwest Papua New Guinea, killing at least 70 people. A disaster relief official said Saturday, and the death toll was expected to rise, reports Reuters.

Colin Travertz of the PNG National Disaster Centre told CNN that 10 villages had been completely destroyed when the wave hit on Friday evening near the town of Aitape.

"At least 70 dead have been confirmed," he said. A local Catholic priest, Father Austen, said the death toll had been confirmed at 30, but with many more missing. Particularly children, it could climb as high as 250.

The tidal wave estimated at between seven metres and 10 metres high hit the coast 100 km west of Aitape in west Sepik province at about 7:00 pm.

It followed an earthquake off the neighbouring Solomon Islands which measured seven on the Richter scale.

The village of Arop with a population at 1,800, on a spit of land fronting the Sissano Lagoon was entirely wiped out with at least five deaths from drowning. Austen said in a statement.

Another Catholic priest in Witape told Reuters that three villages, housing 7,500 people, and a Catholic mission had all been destroyed.

"We have recovered 15 bodies and there are many more to recover," Augustine Kulmana told Reuters from Aitape by telephone. "We still don't have a lot of information. We have sent out boats but they have not yet returned."

The tidal wave hit without any warning and wiped out three villages and a mission station," he said, adding the wave had left floods 10 metres deep in places.

Australian Broadcasting Corporation radio said hundreds of palm thatched houses had been destroyed in low-lying villages to the west of Aitape.

Papua New Guinea lies across the Torres Strait from Queensland, Australia.

"All the houses of theirs along the beach, I'd say 80 or 90 per cent, have been wiped out by the sound of it," Rob Parer, a businessman who lives just outside of Aitape, told the station.

Parer said one villager had told him the wave swept his village away like a broom.

"The people have never heard of anything like it," he said. "You know they thought it was the end of the world."

The Aitape provincial hospital in nearby Vanimo, which had been closed because of funding shortages, had been reopened to treat people being brought in with broken limbs.

"We are moving people into the hospital, but a lot of people are missing, believed drowned. We are still searching for bodies," said Kulmana.

Communications difficulties are expected to prevent the full extent of the wave's impact being revealed for some time.

The area is about 40-km long just a straight beach," said Parer, "a lot of the people lived along with beach."

TEHRAN, July 18: A speeding van overturned in southwestern Iran, killing 20 passengers and injuring 15, the Islamic Republic News Agency reported today, says AP.

It said the accident occurred Friday in Kohgiluyeh-Boyer-Ahmad province near the city of Dehdasht, 700 kilometers (440 miles) south of the Iranian capital, Tehran.

The agency said that some of the injuries were critical. It gave no other details.

Last week, two road accidents in northeastern Iran left 42 people dead and nine injured.

Govt urged to set up 3 pump houses to remove water

The Institute of Diploma Engineers Bangladesh yesterday urged the government to take immediate measures to pump out stagnant water from the Khulna-Jessore Drainage Rehabilitation Project area, reports BSS.

Officials of the institute at a press conference in the city yesterday suggested installation of at least three pump houses at the convenient points to remove the stagnant water which created intolerable sufferings to at least 10 lakh people in the project area for years together.

General secretary of the institute A K M A Hamid, vice-president Manirul Haq Khan, research and technology affairs secretary M R Khairul Imam and literary secretary Yakub Hussain Sikder were present at the press conference.

A K M A Hamid told the newsmen that the constant water stagnancy since the beginning of 1980s led to increased salinity as well as decreased level of oxygen which threatened both aquatic and other animals in the area.

"The problem was created after installation of polders at several points of the project area in a bid to save agriculture lands from salinity, annual floods and heavy rainfall," he said adding that the technology adopted in the area had ultimately led to the water logging situation.

Hamid also said that Bangladesh's weather and environment were not taken into consideration when the foreign technology was adopted and this proved that a vested interest group was behind it to serve their own interest.

He said the long water stagnancy had created various socio-economic problems side by side with reducing the productivity level in the area. "Crop production is reducing year after year while marriage, burial and cremation are being threatened due to constant water stagnancy in the area," Hamid said in a statement.

Afghan tribal leaders meet in Bonn to end civil war

BONN, July 18: Tribal leaders from throughout Afghanistan assembled Sunday in Bonn for the first such meeting of its kind in 20 years, to try to find ways to end their country's civil war, reports AP.

The Committee for Peace and National Unity is meeting through Tuesday to draft peace proposals and try to pave the way for a similar assembly of elders in Afghanistan, meeting coordinator Hamid Sidig said.

The committee of 135 local leaders, which includes Muslims and Hindus, has limited influence in Afghanistan because it is not supported by the Taliban, the Muslim group that controls about 85 per cent of the country.

Sidig said the group would discuss whether to appeal to the international community for an arms embargo against Afghanistan's combatants.
