Sweden's high-tax govt may continue

STOCKHOLM, Sept 21: The Social Democrats, who built Sweden's welfare state and then forced it to deteriorate, now have a chance to make good on their promise to rebuild it, reports AP.

The party came through Sunday's national elections with their worst performance ever - just 36.6 per cent of the votes - but with conservative parties apparently unable to build them from power.

The four non-socialist parties ended up with a total of 169 seats in the 349-seat Riksdag parliament, far more than the Social Democrats' 131, but short of a majority.

The Social Democrats' strength lies in the seats won by two other parties, the Left Party and the Greens. Together, the three parties would have 190 seats.

But it's not a combination that makes the Social Democrats comfortable. The Social Democrats say the other two parties' policies are unrealistic, and the Left and the Greens adamantly oppose Sweden's possible participation in the European Union's single-currency system which the Social Democrats have supported in theory if not in action.

When they regained power in 1994, the Social Democrats embarked on an austerity programme of cutting funding to Sweden's cherished cradle-to-grave social services in order to extract the country from an enormous debt.

The measures paid off in restoring balance to public finances, including a predicted small budget surplus this year, in a virtually undetectable inflation rate and in reducing unemployment, although it is still high at 7.3 per cent.

But the measures also left Swedes watching medical and other services decline even as they continued to pay the world's highest taxes.
