Jordan plays defensive

CHICAGO, Sept 29: Basketball superstar Michael Jordan played defence in court here Monday as he took the witness stand to answer breach-of-contract charges in a lawsuit filed by producers of a basketball movie, reports AFP.

Jordan gave evasive answers to questions from attorneys for Heaven Corp, a production company which is claiming between 16 and 20 million dollars in damages resulting from Jordan's failure to honour a 1987 contract to appear in the movie "Heaven is a Playground."

The movie, filmed in Chicago's Cabrini-Green Housing Project in 1990 and released in 1991, was box-office flop.

Jordan told the jury of seven women and five men that his agent handled most of the dealings with the production company.

He conceded that he had signed a tentative deal to star in the movie in exchange for a 50,000 dollar retainer — which he later repaid — and a five per cent a share of the profits. But he said the deal fell through and no final contract was signed because the movie producers were unable to line up the financing.

Jordan has countersued the production company and is seeking two million dollars in punitive damages, charging that it lied to him when he was told financing for the movie had been secured.

Jordan, one of the world's most popular athletes, received a four-million dollar guarantee for his starring role in the movie 'Space Jam.'
