Session jam at JU Archeology Dept Students of '95-'96 session yet to take their final exams

Department of Archeology at Jahangirnagar University (JU) could not complete first year final examinations of the students under the 1995-96 session even though it began 15 months back.

The students sat for their written examinations on January 17, 1998, one year after they started classes in February 1997. But, the examination process is yet to be completed with referred examinations for unsuccessful students still going on.

Though the written tests were held uninterrupted and were completed on time, the academic tour, submission of tour reports by the students, viva voce, referred examination and publication of results were delayed stretching the examination procedure over almost 15 months.

Students alleged that the unexpected delays were caused in all the cases due to teachers' negligence in taking classes, marking answer script at exams conducting academic tours and assisting the students in preparing the tour reports.

As per rules, the tour report bears 50 marks.

Though the students completed their written examination within February '98, they would not conduct their tour on time for the teachers' failure to make additional arrangements in this regard, a first year (old) student told The Daily Star.

They submitted their tour report two months after the scheduled time.

Meanwhile, final year examination of the first year students of the batch under session 1996-97 could not be held as the first year final examinations of their previous batch are yet to be completed. The students completed their classes in January.
