Jems from Dui Bangla

The works done at the Dui Bangla workshop in Dhaka put up at the week-long show at Shilpakala Academy running until Apr 21

THE finished works of the artists of Dui Bangla workshop that was held at Gulshan about two months back were finally to be seen at the Shilpakala Academy. This brought together well-known artists of West Bengal like Sanat Kar, Paritosh Sen, Jagan Chowdhury, Amitabh Ganopadhyay, Sunil Das, Dipali Bhattacharjee, Subah Prasanna, Samal Dutta Roy.

By Fayza Haq

Niranjan Pradhan, Parish Matty, Amitabh Banerjee, Amal Gosh, along with their contemporaries from Bangladesh Rafiqun Nabi, Aminul Islam, Hamiduzzaman Khan, Murtaja Basir, Ranjit Das, and Hashim Khan had worked diligently despite the prevailing "hartal".

The Subho Prasanna, coming to Dhaka had felt that he had not left home. He had said that there was no difference in the feelings and nuances of the artists of the two different countries. He said that the eagerness that he detected in Bangladesh was because the artists there belonged to an independent country and so felt encouraged.

Samal Dutta Roy felt that although Bangladesh might not have much material assets, it certainly had cultural wealth to take pride in. He had said that the Bangladeshi artists had not lagged behind in any manner. He had believed that with regular exchange of ideas between Bangladesh and India, the people of West Bengal now enjoyed Bangladeshi plays, songs and literature. He had felt that young artists of Bangladesh enjoyed more exposure to the west than those in West Bengal. He had pointed out that many of the West Bengali artists had ancestors originating from Bangladesh.

Paresh Maity had also felt that apart from the passport-checkpoint, there was nothing that separated West Bengal from Bangladesh. He had admitted that the Bangladeshi artists were more experimental and west-oriented than their counterparts in West Bengal.

Amitabh Banerjee, who had been to Bangladesh earlier, had expressed his deep admiration for the scientific and artistic progress that he saw in Dhaka and felt that although there were stylistic differences there were no qualitative differences between the works of the artists of Dui Bangla.

Rafiqun Nabi had said that the purpose of the artists' camp was not to learn from each-

A Unique Jugalbandi

Sabina's new album Tomai Khujehchi on Sumon's composition

SUMON Chatterjee and Sabina Yasmeen for some time now appearing in concerts as a team. For music loving people this is a fresh air particularly at a time when modern Bengali music lost all its past glories and charm with all the major composers like Sali Chowdhury and Hemanta are dead and gone.

By Ziaul Karim

Sumon almost stormed into the dry and repetitive Bengali musical scenes early nineties with his now regarded as a contemporary classic number Tomakei Chai. Though Sumon has not turned into a cult figure over the years, his music played the role of a pathfinder. He, as critics have aptly pointed out, helped salvage Bengali music from foolish sentimentalism. In concert music Sumon has brought some scintillating changes like talking to the audience, explaining his inspiration, the way a particular music is composed and than how he reacts to a particular political or social event. All these made Sumon a performer par excellence.

When we have been missing after the golden era of Tagore and Nazrul a gifted poet-composer one who writes his own lyric and set them to music, Sumon has brought back this tradition with him.

On the other hand, Sabina endowed with a romantic voice kept her listeners charmed for over two decades. She is surely the prima donna of popular Bengali music.

When the two team up no doubt there would be something special. Their recent collaboration in the form of an audio cassette Tomai Khujehchi is a brilliant work in contemporary music milieu. Sumon's songs are always worth-reading as poems. The 12 new numbers that included in the volume are no exception. This album is significant for a particular reason. For the first time Sumon has made a venture into melodic composition which points at his deep understanding of Sabina's voice. If he had done something to his usual socio-politically conscious stuff that might not have suited for a romantic voice of Sabina. When the question comes about art Sumon doesn't compromise. He knows how to bring out the best in Sabina and the album Tomai Khujehchi shows.

Esho Simanta Par Hoiyn, the fourth song of side A would surely be regarded as a tour de force. At take 40 the album, a soundtrack production, is well within the reach and no doubt worth collecting.
