PM's question hour

Hasina replies to 334 queries in 27 months

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina has replied to a total of 334 questions including 156 supplementaries on 30 occasions during her weekly 'question hour' in the Jatiya Sangsad in the last 27 months, parliamentary records showed, reports BSS.

The 'Prime Minister's Question Hour' was first introduced by the present government on February 25, 1997. It was aimed at ensuring government's transparency and accountability to the people's representatives.

According to parliament records, Sheikh Hasina has personally given answers to questions from MPs on 25 occasions while rest of her replies were tabled in the house. The Tuesday's PM's Question Hour has already generated widespread interest within parliament and outside since it is being broadcast live by Bangladesh Betar.

At the beginning, the duration of the question hour was set for 15 minutes, but later it was expanded to 30 minutes following requests from both treasury and opposition bench members.

The records revealed that the treasury bench members have played the significant role in asking questions to the prime minister. It said till the 12th session of the current Jatiya Sangsad, out of the 168 questions, the ruling Awami League members asked 108, main opposition party BNP 37 and opposition Jatiya Party 23 questions.

However, the Leader of the Opposition in Parliament Begum Khaleda Zia did not raise any question to the Prime Minister so far.

The records also showed that questions from BNP were comparatively less because of its frequent walkouts and absence from the session, particularly when the PM speaks.

It revealed that Begum Zia attended only 29 days in the present Sangsad and took part in discussions only on 14 occasions during the total 230 working days.
