Beating Heart Surgery performed Private sector enters new era in coronary health care

By Staff Correspondent

A team of surgeons performed the first ever coronary artery bypass surgery on a beating heart without cardiopulmonary bypass in private sector in the country.

Dr Murali P Vettath, chief cardiac surgeon of Z H Sikder

Cardiac Care and Research centre told a press conference of their successful venture Tuesday.

"This technology which has multiple benefit was only recently introduced in the West. We are not far behind," Dr Murali told the journalists while showing a video clipping of Beating Heart Surgery being done on an old man.

Explaining the procedure, Dr Murali from India who is on a mission here to help introduce the technology here in Bangladesh said, "Usually open heart surgery involves arresting the heart so that surgery can be done without any interruption. The blood circulation in the body is continued by use of heart-lung and oxygenator machines."

He said, "Normally it is very difficult to work on the heart when the heart is beating, i.e. while it is in motion (pumping). Beating Heart Surgery allows surgeons to work on the heart while it is still in motion."

Dr Ajit Kumar, chief cardiologist of the centre said, "The most important thing about Beating Heart Surgery is that the heart itself gets continuous supply of blood while surgery is on. The technique, that requires special drugs to slow down the heartbeats, avoids other complications that may arise during the operation."

The technique is appropriate on old age patients having multi-organ function problems.

"The technique was developed considering the possible risk of side-effects of arresting heart beats during open heart surgery on old age patients," Dr Kumar explained.

Mozaharuddin, 70 was the first patient to undergo the Beating Heart Surgery at the centre on Sunday. His condition is said to be stable.

Since last February Z H Sikder Cardiac Care & Research Centre has been carrying out open heart surgery which are conducted by a 60-member team from India that specialises in heart.

The 60-bed centre has some of the most modern facilities required for cardiac care including a coronary invasive care unit. Specially trained nurses and doctors from South India manage all necessary care for the patients. The specialised team of doctors also regularly takes academic sessions.
