Songs of Tagore Sells Well

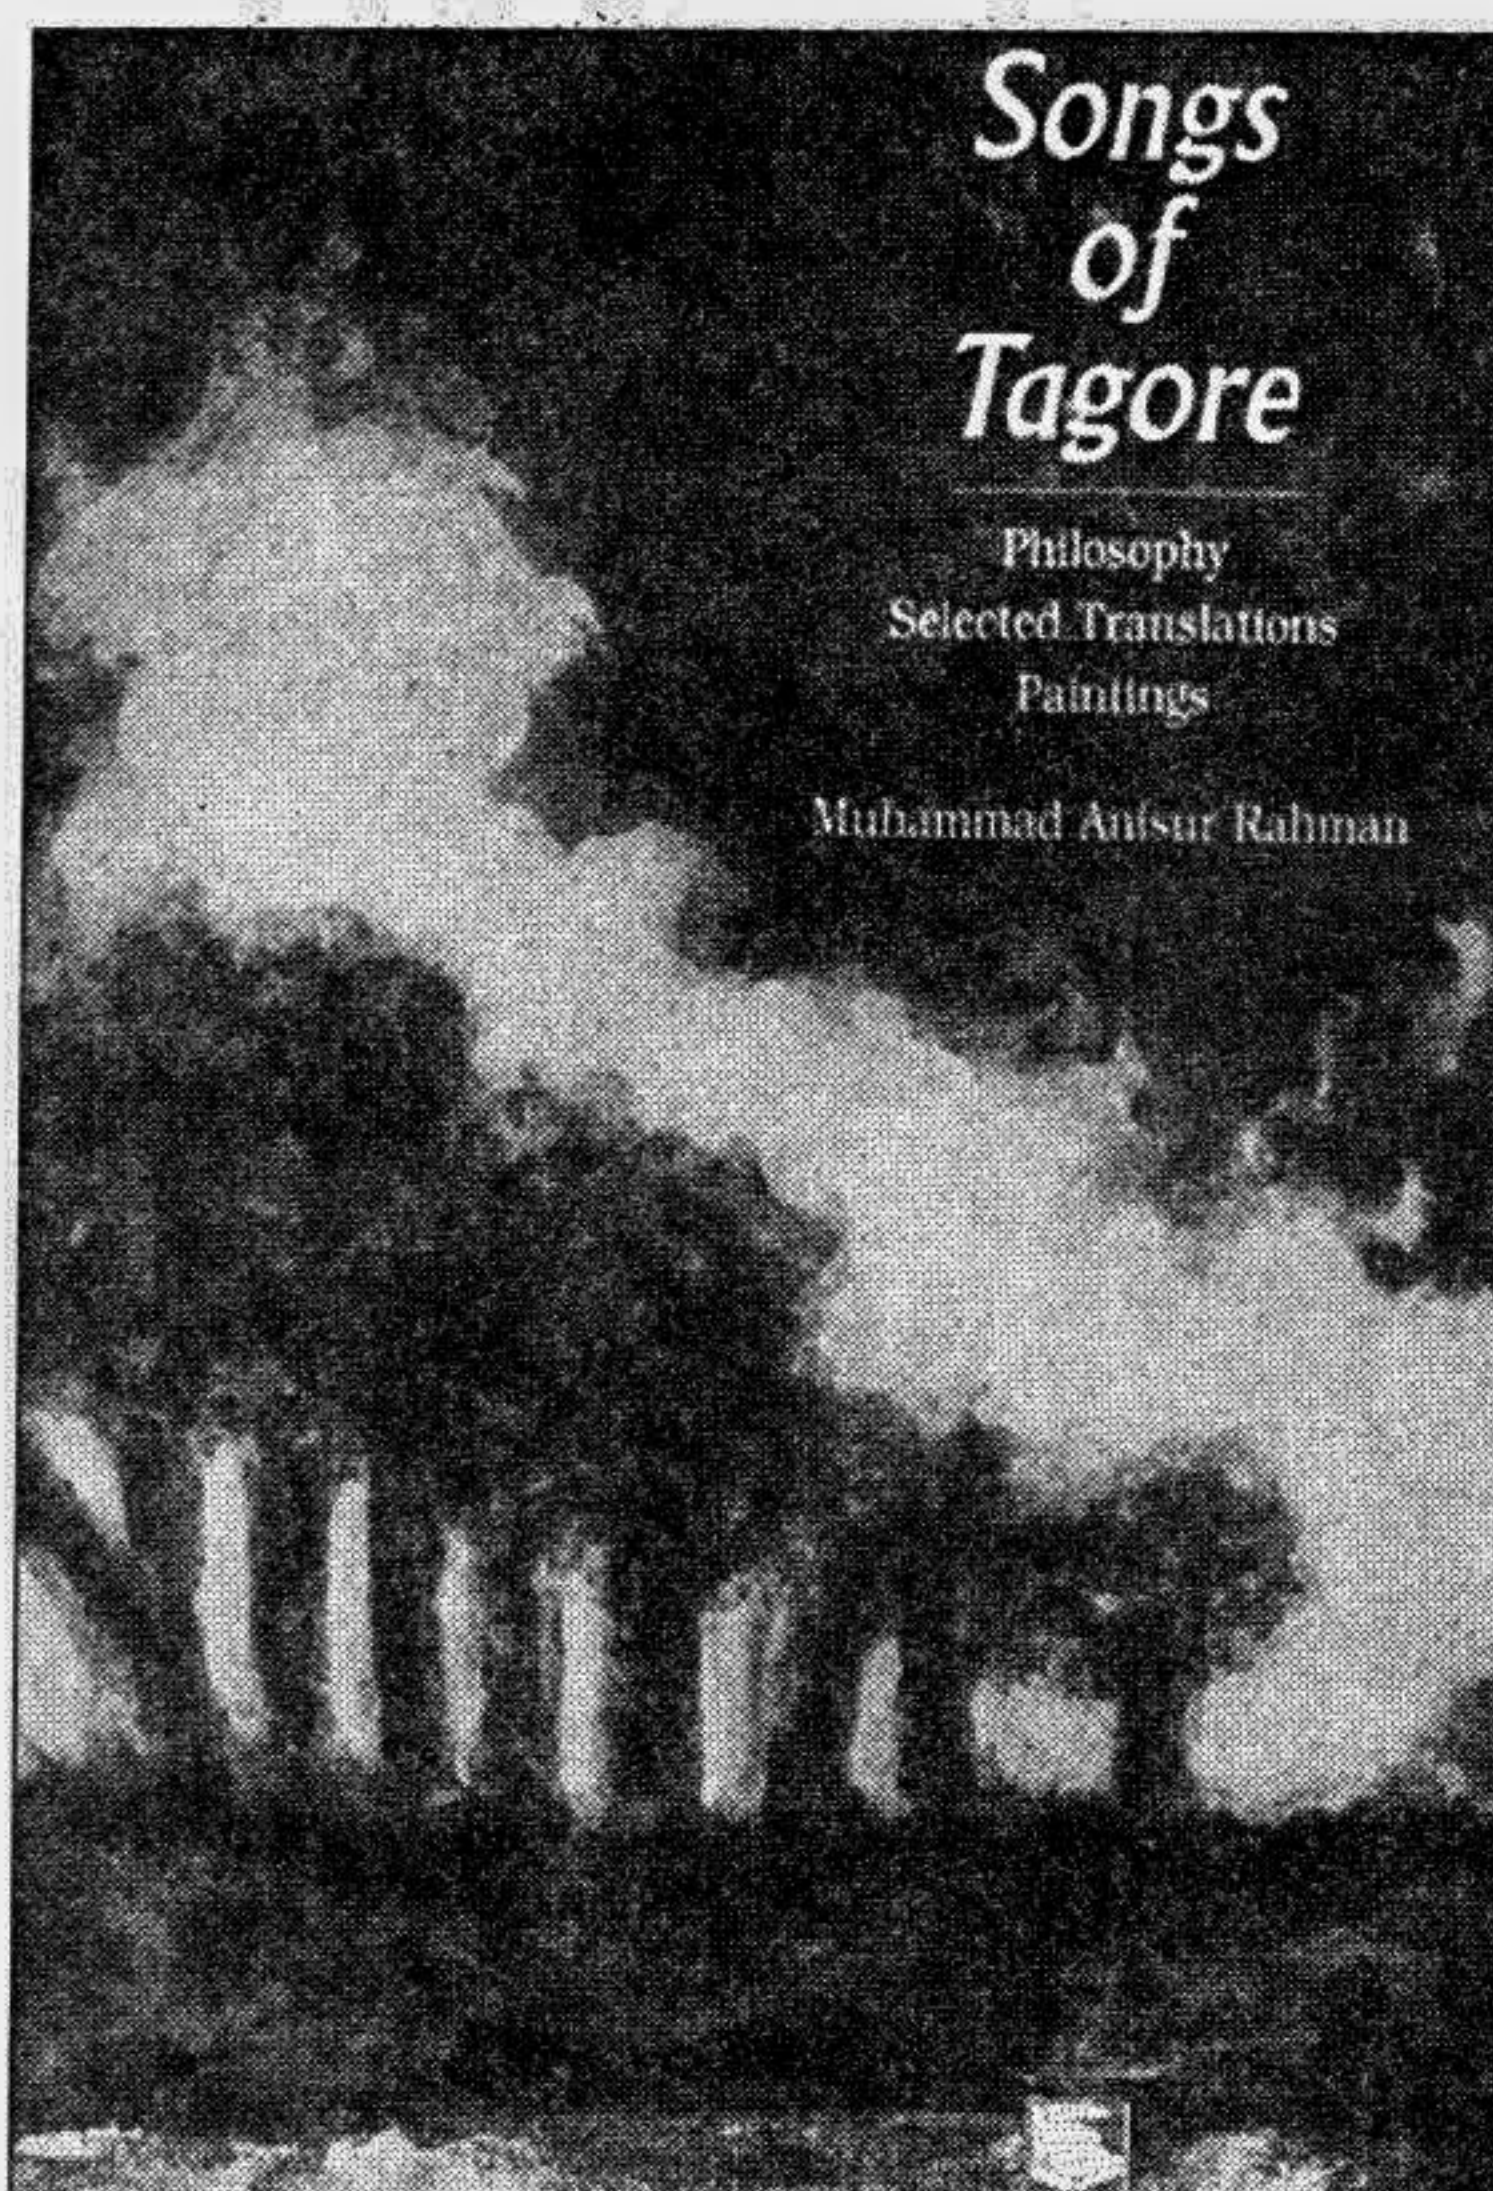

Tagore songs translated into canvas generate lot of interest

By Cultural Correspondent

THE launching ceremony of Anisur Rahman's book 'Songs of Tagore' took place on 22 Shrawan (August 6) in memory of the Nobel laureate, Rabindranath Tagore since then the book is selling well. The book contains translations of Tagore songs like 'Sharthok jonon amar' which has been translated into 'Fulfilled is my heart', 'Megh boleche jabo jabo' into 'The cloud says, I shall go', 'Mahabishye Mohakashy' into 'O Great Universe!', 'Ami het-hay thaki tomay gan shonabo bole' is 'I stay there only to sing your song' and many more. Anisur Rahman has also discussed some of these songs and shed some light on Rabindranath's philosophy, as he sees it.

The book is being sold in Gallery 21, where the launching ceremony took place along with the opening of the exhibition of paintings by some of the most talented artists of the country, who depicted the songs, which Anisur Rahman translated, on their canvasses. Pictures of some of these paintings can be seen at the end of the book, 'Songs of Tagore'.

It is interesting to note how each looks at the same thing in a distinct way. Anisur Rahman translated Tagore's songs and discussed them, the way he thought of it and the artists painted what they thought of the particular song and portrayed what they felt in a different medium in a very different way. The union between paintings and writings brought about by Rabindra Sangeet in itself speaks volumes for what Tagore's songs can do.

The exhibition consists of about 50 paintings including that of Mohammad Kibria, Rafiqun Nabi, Ranjit Das and Mohammad Iqbal. Each painting portrays a single song like Kibria's 'Reverberations of drums sounded in the heart' (Hridoyey mondrilo domoru guru guru), Hashem Khan's 'How lovely you are only my mind knows' (Koto j tumi monohar), Rafiqun Nabi's 'There in the clouds of the sra-van sky' (Ami srabono akashe oi) and so on.

The best thing about the whole programme is that it is very different — it is unlikely that anyone has seen such a unique book-launching ceremony or so many paintings based on Rabindra Sangeet. The attention that it has attracted from the general populace as well as the intellectuals of the country is remarkable. The positive response from the people must make Samunnay and Gallery 21 very proud — kudos to them both for organizing such a distinguished and entertaining curriculum.

'Let There Be Light': Nattyachakra's 37th Production

The theater group turns 27

By Mishu M. Chowdhury

THE members of 'Nattyachakra', one of the leading theater groups of the post-liberation Bangladesh, celebrated their twenty-seventh anniversary by staging 'Let There Be Light', an adaptation from the celebrated novel 'Ar Kato Din' by the famous writer and film-maker Zahir Raihan at the Mahila Samati Auditorium on Tuesday August 10, 1999.

Playwright Abul Hasnat has made some changes to the story by putting additional parts from Krishan Chander's 'Gaddar'. Putting the novel 'Ar Kato Din' into a movie was always a dream to Zahir Raihan. He even entitled the movie 'Let There Be Light'. But the irreplaceable demise of the author left an uncompleted ending of the cinematography. The play is dedicated to the memory of the novelist Zahir Raihan.

A short speech by M. Harun, president and founder member of 'Nattyachakra' was followed by the play 'Let There Be Light'. M. Harun in his speech said that they have the experience in working in different media, from visual performance to performing art. He recognized today's generation as the generation of the television as it is among the finest media of knowledge. The greatest achievement to them is the admiration of the audiences from viewing their play. He symbolizes the media of drama a silent communicating media in between the artists and the audiences.

The play started with the melancholy notes from the flute played at the background. As the melody of the flute faded away by the rigid sounds of the march past gets louder. Three men in black and red uniform appeared at the stage. But very quickly it also faded away. A huge cry was becoming more and more distinct as each of the voices could be noted. Men, women, old and young all crying out loud in fear, in fear of death, in fear of racism. The quick changes of different sequences horrified the audience present there. The unusual entry of the performers from the upper gallery by ropes, and their chaotic running around by the aisles managed to create a panic among the viewers. The fear in each and every one was necessary in understanding of the play.

'Let There Be Light' is more like a symbolic story, representing the sufferings and horrors of death. The script writer tried to portray the hate among the people, racism among the sects, and the barbarism present in each person. The play centralizes the pathos of a father losing his child in Hiroshima, a son becoming orphan as his mother was killed in the roads of Jerusalem, a loving sister begin killed by the rapist savages, a father shoot dead at Bukhenwald. He was hanged for loving the people.

The current situation of the society is not much better than the drama itself. In expressing the director's view with some outstanding performers such as the famous TV artist Falguni Hamid.

In the second part of Dakoo special, Picture This continues with the saga of filmi dakoos who galloped along the rough and tough seventies, sitting high and mighty on their black stallions, shooting at word go from their never-say-die double barrel rifles! Dalip brings back the memories of the Indian cowboy — Firoz Khan's westernized versions of deshi dakoos. It didn't matter that these metamorphosed dakoos were as far away from our own real dakoos as Mississippi could be from Chamba. The point was that these were dakoos with a difference. Soon, it was our heroines turn to play the lady dakoos and sure they did, from Rekha, Hema Malini to Seema Biswas in Bandit Queen, most of them tried their hands in dakoo-girl.

The Pearl Academy of Fashion, NIFT, and the JD Institute of fashion, have sent their teams to battle it out in style, at 3-2-1 while Elizabeth I, Hong Kong nightclubs and stage musicals constitute some of the questions in Round 1. 'Perfume names', 'Heroines of Big B', and 'Characters in Asterix', are the themes for the fast-paced Round 2. In Round 3, the two remaining contenders seek to name 'Animals with pouches', and in the Jackpot Round, the participant tries desperately, not to succumb to his given theme of 'Going Down Under'!
