Tomorrow String of nines may disrupt computers

LONDON, Sept 7: Stand by for another dud millennium computer bug warning.

Thursday, September 9 may be represented as 9999 on many computer software programmes. In theory this string of nines might disrupt systems and provide a preview of the millennium bug chaos predicted when computer clocks click over into the next century at midnight on December 31, 1999, reports Reuters.

Many programmers on old computer systems dating mostly from the 1960s used bunches of nines to instruct a computer programme to shut down, or prepare for maintenance.

So the theory is that on Thursday, computers will come across a series of nines and grind to a halt, throwing a spanner into the works of a huge range of businesses from banking to electricity generation and car manufacturing. You can relax, for the next 100-odd days at least. Experts say

300 kg explosives recovered from a house in Benapole

BENAPOLE, Sept 7: Sharsha police today recovered 300 kilograms of smuggled explosives from a house near the land port here, reports BSS.

Police arrested two people for their alleged involvement in smuggling the explosives from India.

Acting on a tip-off Sharsha police arrested Hafizur Rahman and Shahjahan from the house of one Shamsur Rahman, this afternoon and recovered nearly 300 kilograms of explosives loaded in six jute bags. But Shamsur Rahman managed to escape.

The sources said the primary investigation proves that the seized explosive is sulphur which can be used as raw material for making bombs. At least 3000 powerful bombs can be made by using the seized sulphur, the sources added.

BDR patrolling in the border area was strengthened following the recovery of the explosives.

The arrested were taken to custody for interrogation.

Gusmao freed

JAKARTA, Sept 7: East Timor resistance leader Xanana Gusmao was freed by Indonesia today, reports Reuters.

Documents formalising Gusmao's release after more than six years in Indonesian jails were signed at the Justice Ministry in Jakarta.

Gusmao's eyes were watering as the signing ceremony was completed. Justice Minister Muladi signed on behalf of the Indonesian government.

The resistance leader, widely expected to become president of independent East Timor, was given a wrapped gift by the government.

Martial law, shoot-on-sight curfew in East Timor

JAKARTA, Sept 7: Indonesia imposed martial law and a shoot-on-sight curfew in East Timor today, report agencies.

The violence continued unabated with people being terrorised to flee Dili, while pro-Jakarta gangs roamed the streets burning or looting buildings as part of an apparent scorched-earth campaign.

"Anybody who remains behind in Dili will be killed," Christian Brother Pat told Australian radio from his home in a deserted Dili suburb.

"Houses will be burned, buildings will be destroyed, the plan seems to be to wreck the city, so that what is left is not worth talking about. If East Timor is to be independent it will have nothing," he said.

It was a comment taken up by one pro-Jakarta militia leader near a refugee area in West Timor.

"We will burn (East Timor) down and start all over again... we are ready to go the jungles for 20 years," Herminio da Silva Costa told Reuters in the West Timor capital of Kupang.

Indonesia's Antara news agency said more than 10,000 refugees arrived in Atambua, West Timor, today.

The United Nations, organiser of last week's ballot which gave overwhelming support to break away from Indonesia, said more than 40,000 East Timorese had fled their homes and many others were heading

Dr Brundtland speaks to The Daily Star

Pro-poor healthcare holds the key

By Toufique Imrose Khalidi

Dr Brundtland

The poor in poor countries suffer not so much because of resource constraints but for their governments' failure to fashion pro-poor healthcare systems, says Dr Gro Harlem Brundtland, the celebrated head of the World Health Organisation (WHO).

"It's not true that poor countries have poor health indicators because they are poor," said Dr Brundtland, now in the city to attend a WHO regional conference. "A lot depends on how these countries fashion their healthcare system."

A former Norwegian prime minister who headed the World Commission on Environment and Development (the Brundtland Commission) that produced the famous Our Common Future in 1987, the WHO chief spoke to The Daily Star in an exclusive interview yesterday. She spoke of deep socio-economic disparity among people in this region, where causes of concern included high military spending while a vast majority of the people were denied basic healthcare.

"There is a need to greatly reduce the burden of excess mortality and preventable disability suffered by the poor,"

Dr Brundtland, who has vowed to become a "moral voice" in improving health of the people of the world since taking over in July last year, said she linked health targets to broader issues of development such as governance, democracy, accountability, resource allocation and free press.

"The goal of halving the number of people living in ab-

Press freedom under threat?

By Mahfuz Anam

Two issues agitate our minds today. First, the attack on our higher judiciary, literally terming it accessory to crime; and second, the threat to free press which appears to have been shelved for the moment.

Never before have we witnessed such a venomous attack on our higher judiciary, to literally say that our High Court judges are patronising terrorists is the most insulting — not to mention unfortunate, unnecessary and inappropriate — remark that one could have made against our High Court. What makes the remark tragically significant is that it came from no less a person than the home minister himself. What makes the whole episode more reprehensible is that the home minister directed his attack at the office and the person of the chief justice of the Supreme Court himself. Implication of his statement is that our High Court and Supreme Court judges, including the chief justice himself, are in collusion with the terrorists — the latter committing the crime and the former permitting them to do so by granting them bail indiscriminately.

What is the cause for this totally uncalled for insulting remark? The reason is the courts' granting bail to a huge number of people nabbed by police on various criminal charges. According to government claims, a large number of people arrested so far under the home ministry's drive against terrorists and criminals have been set free on bail. Let us assume for the sake of argument that all those arrested were real criminals.

Then we can conclude that the government has genuine reasons to feel frustrated and let down. However, the facts is that almost all of those bails were granted by the lower judiciary, which is under the direct control of the government. Why then is such venom against the High Court and the Supreme Court? Is it because the High Court stopped eviction of slum-dwellers? Was it such a bad action? The High Court invited the home minister's wrath for that ruling as a result of which ruling party backed slum-dwellers were instigated to occupy the premises of our High Court. But can it conceivably be a reason for such an attack against the chief justice of the Supreme Court? (See editorial on this issue.)

Bangabandhu Cup final marred by fracas Japan win in extra-time

The Japan FL selection lifted the 2nd Bangabandhu Cup with a 3-2 'golden goal' win over the Ghana Olympic team in a fiercely contested final at the Bangabandhu National Stadium yesterday.

Takashi Takahashi tapped home the match-winner in front of a near-packed big bowl 10 minutes into the sudden-death extra time after the regulation 90 minutes was deadlocked 2-2.

The Japanese erupted in euphoria when Takahashi, the golden boy with the golden touch, pushed a loose ball, coming off the shaky grip of the Ghanaian substitute custodian Taw Berko, into an empty net leaving the 'bad boys' from Africa in depths of despair.

For Japan it was the semi-final revisited when they had beaten archrivals South Korea in identical manner.

Yesterday, they took a 2-0 lead against Ghana in the eventual first half which was also marked by a send-off. The Ghanaians were reduced to 10 men at the breather when their custodian Osei Boateng was shown the red card for first committing a nasty tackle on Japanese forward Yoshiyuki Yokose and then pouncing on the Filipino referee Jerry Endress.

The match was suspended for about eight minutes when the temperamental Ghanaian booters let loose a reign of terror after Japanese nimble forward Joe scored his second goal two minutes into the injury time of the first half. The otherwise cracker of a match took an ugly turn when the Ghanaian players, who claimed an offside, assaulted the Sri Lankan linesmen Weekramatunga and then manhandled the Filipino referee after the latter brandished the dreaded red card. Things however came

Bus strike in Rajshahi

From Our Correspondent

RAJSHAHI, Sept 7: Road Communication between Rajshahi and rest of the country remained suspended from this morning following a wildcat strike by the Rajshahi and Natore Bus Owners' Association.

The strike has been called to protest assault on a bus driver and ransacking of some motor vehicles at Dighapatia in Natore, sources said.

A group of students of Dighapatia MK College this morning assaulted a driver of a Rajshahi-Bogra bus service on Natore-Bogra road due to 'misbehaviour' of the bus driver and the helper, witnesses said. During the incident, the helpers and conductors drove away with two students and assaulted them before dropping them on the road.

PM on BNP propaganda

Those now shedding tears will flee to India

By Staff Correspondent

Prime Minister Sheikh Hasina yesterday came down heavily on the BNP-led opposition parties for their persistent propaganda that the country's sovereignty was at stake and it was being turned into a vassal state of India because of her government's policy of subservience.

Hasina said Awami League fought the Liberation War and won independence and "if necessary, leaders and workers of the party will lay down their lives along with people to protect the country's sovereignty."

"Those who are now shedding crocodile tears for the country will flee to India cowardly in such a situation", the Awami League chief said during the PM's Question Time in the Jatiya Sangsad.

"They were the people who made Indian flags for hoisting those in Bangladesh," she said, referring to a clandestine plan allegedly made by some Opposition activists to hoist Indian flags in the Chittagong Hill Tracts (CHT) on the eve of the CHT peace accord.

The PM was visibly angry as she replied to a supplementary question from Jatiya Party lawmaker Golam Faruk Obhi

Anti-terrorism law

Khaleda predicts disaster for AL

By Staff Correspondent

BNP chairperson Khaleda Zia yesterday said Awami League could not cling to power in the past even by introducing one-party BKSAL system and would fail again even after enacting new laws on the pretext of curbing terrorism.

"BKSAL brought disaster for you (AL). Inshaallah, the anti-terrorism laws you are going to introduce will bring misfortune for you once again," she warned.

Addressing a public meeting at Dholaikhal crossing in the Old City, the Leader of the Opposition advised the government against introducing such 'black laws'.

The former prime minister observed that there were BKSAL-type provisions in the proposed anti-terrorism law.

She warned that this "autocratic and puppet" government would not be allowed to introduce any black law in the country.

In her 20-minute speech, she criticised the government for

Bid to overcome depression in capital market

Business leaders form task force

By Staff Correspondent

Leaders of business yesterday formed a 10-member task force to suggest ways to overcome the prevailing depression in the country's capital market.

The announcement came at a dialogue between the FBCCI and DSE brokers.

FBCCI vice-president MA Mumin was made head of the task force while the DSE chief Rakibur Rahman was chosen as its deputy.

Other members included presidents of DCCI, MCCI, FICCI and BCI and several DSE councillors.

The task force will submit a report by September 30.

DSE chairman Rakibur Rahman hailed the move calling it a big step towards bringing the moribund stock market back to normal.

While the DSE chief said he would not be blame anybody for the present state of the stock market, FBCCI president Abdul Awal Mintoo urged the businessmen present to speak out regarding the problems and solutions.

But there was hardly any response to the FBCCI chief's call as only two reluctant participants spoke briefly on the issues.

Later, some business leaders told The Daily Star that they were "scared to talk" because of "the recent political and law and order situation" and "thought it the better to keep silent". The businessmen spoke on condition of anonymity.

The discussants identified capital market as a major source of industrial finance when the commercial banks were reluctant to provide long-term credit.
