Abul Mansur Ahmad Sung

A commemorative discussion in celebration of Ahmad's 100th Birthday

By Nadine Murshid

ANGLA Academy honoured Late Abul Mansur Ahmad through a discussion as part of celebrating his birth centenary on September 16, 1999 at the Bangla Academy Seminar Room.

Ahmad was an acclaimed journalist, an eminent writer, a politician as well as a lawyer. Born on September 3, 1898, he had seen the turn of the twentieth century and perceived things with a keen eye and a broad mind.

Director General of Bangla Academy Syed Anwar Hossain speaking at length about Mansur Ahmad, said, 'As a politician and as a journalist Abul Mansur Ahmad had done his job well and as a writer he had produced an excellent array of books of which Ayna, Food Conference, Asmani Porda, Gulliver Shophornama are best known. His autobiographical books too have earned popularity among the general populace.'

Quoting Ahmad, he said, 'Culture is our corporate personality. Our culture is what we are. If culture can be compared with the personality of a human being, so can civilisation, which means what we have, is our civilisation.'

He further quoted Ahmad cultural and said, 'Civilisation is a rational construction and culture is an emotional growth.' On the divide of West and East Pakistan Mansur Ahmad wrote, 'West Pakistan and East Pakistan may be of the same nation, but their nationality is different and they have two different corporate personality. So, the culture of the two is different as well.'

Professor Rajeeb Humayun read the key-note piece on Abul Mansur titled Ahmad and Bangladesh's Culture. The seven-page article included anecdotes about Ahmad, his life, his beliefs and his nobility. Prof Humayun said, 'At that age and time the broadmindedness he had is still remarkable. Ahmad was first a Bengali, then a Muslim. Some thought him to be a fundamentalist, but he was not so. He practised Islam and he wanted Muslims to spread around the world - not enclosed in a single country. He had said that West Bengal and East Bengal differed the way the American English differed. He said that our culture is to be built and created and not imitated from the other Bengal. By our Bengal, he meant Bangladesh and Assam. The Hindu-Muslim conflict also features in the paper. Professor Humayun then spoke about the Bengali language and how it is losing its many dialects because BTV and Radio Bangladesh present their programmes in a particular manner. He said all should prevail starting from the 36 dialects to Joy Bangla and Bangladesh Zindabad.

Renowned journalist Syed Abul Maksud said, 'Abul Mansur Ahmad was a journalist, a writer and a politician; and he was good at them all. While he was in Jagannath, Abul Kalam influenced him to be a journalist and later he worked for Mujibur Rahman's paper. In 1947 he worked for Doinik Ittehar in Calcutta and by the 1960s he was a renowned journalist.'

He then displayed two old newspapers, Doinik Ittehar and Noboyon containing news reports by Abul Mansur Ahmad. In his books, Mansur Ahmad emphasised on content, not the words he used or the language. After the partition he had said in his book Amar Dekha Rajnitir Ponchash Bochhor, 'All Hindus should be ready to leave Pakistan. If they do not it would mean that these people want to be Pakistanis. The fight is against Hindus, not India. Will and can Hindus be Pakistanis? This depends on the behaviour of the Muslims towards them. Can they be respected? Only time can tell.'

Syed Abul Maksud continued, 'Abul Mansur Ahmad considered Islam to be East Bengal's one and only force. He had said that years of practising Islam had made East and West Bengal completely different.' He said that Mansur Ahmad was one of the founder fathers of modern Bangladesh and had he governed Bangladesh, this would have been a place where a person can live in harmony. He said he felt that a road should be named after this man so that everyone gets to know him.

Professor Shaheen Akhtar then went up on stage and said, 'My first contact with Abul Mansur Ahmad was when I was in school. I had won a prize for something and I was awarded with his book, Food Conference. I didn't like it - the cover was attractive but the name did not appeal to me! While handing it to me our principal told me to read it saying it was a very good book. Later when I started to read it, I was spell-bound. Then I read all his books starting from Amar Dekha Rajnitir Ponchash Bochhor to Relish. I think Abul Mansur Ahmad is a writer with whom you always cannot agree or ignore. He was a writer in such a time when we were not independent, when we did not have our identity, our culture. Now, we have a culture of our own, the culture in which he believed. We even have our words, like egg used to be 'anda' and now it's 'dim'. Eminent writer Syed Shamsul Huq used to write 'butum' instead of 'botam' (button); Sanjida Khatun uses words which are our own and we no longer use the words the West Bengalis use - we have developed a language of our own.'

Professor Anisuzzaman, who presided over the function, 'We are here to bestow our respect to Late Abul Mansur Ahmad. Ahmad was a writer and he wrote with emotion and utmost sincerity. He joined Muslim League in his time and one of his goals in life was to help the less fortunate and the disabled. He had always maintained that the two Bengali cultures were completely different. When he talked of East Bengal he meant Bangladesh and Assam. In my opinion he over-emphasised on the idea that Muslims have no contribution in literature.'

Professor Anisuzzaman concluded the seminar with the words, 'Abul Mansur Ahmad wanted an identity of our own and now we have it. We have tried to commemorate this man of great calibre but it is not enough. Nothing we can do can honour him as much as he deserves.'

Design. The influence of graphic design is clearly evident in his paintings. Use of special textures also prove his excellent skills as a printmaker.

The artist loves to work in mixed media but also adept oil painting. He has a few pieces in watercolour on display at his present exhibition. Though he is comfortable with all three media, he likes working on acrylic best, he says.

The works of the artist are in vivid colours. In various geometrical forms and strokes he expresses his affection towards nature. Green and blue, the true colours of nature, are seen used elaborately in his works. He also uses demure colours in some of his paintings. The pattern of colours and different types of texture such as flow of colours, dots, and spontaneous brush strokes give his pieces a very lively look.

Though he uses light colours, there are a few pieces in dark colours. One such example is The Rain Must Fall part 1 and its continuation The Rain Must Fall part 2. Usage of geometrical forms specially the shape of the boat is one of his favorites and he has used it generously in many of his works.

Rezaun Nabi's exhibition is open till September 25 s from 10.00 am to 8.00 p.m., every day.

Having fallen into semi-feudal and semi-colonial society for over hundred years, the Chinese people suffered oppression by imperialism, feudalism and bureaucratic-capitalism for over half a century; the new China finally won national liberation, and an huge province stood up in the east of the world.

On October 1, 1949 the chairman of the People's Republic of China, Mao Zedong, proclaimed the founding of the country at a speech made to the nation from Tein An-Mien Square. Since then, for the past fifty years, 1949-1999, the Chinese people has built up their own great country by overcoming the difficulties and setbacks. The Chinese people, full of confidence, are rising in the new century.

The exhibition signifies the development of the country through various themes of the photographs differing from national and occasional ceremonies, events to personalities, athletes and landscapes, landmarks to the development on the industrial, cultural and social fields.

The themes varied from one topic to another as they present the development in the industrial sectors and educational system, different cultural events and their colourful celebration, the ruling system of the government and the parliament, farming and crop production, technical development etc. Aerial photos of the urban and rural China show the impressive architecture of the nation as in the photographs of the central hall at Beijing taken by Lan Hanguang, during the second session of the ninth National People's Congress (March 5, 1999).
