Govt abolishes previous system of house allotment for govt employees

The government has abolished the previous system of allotment of house to the government officers and employees and formed three committees to bring transparency and dynamism in the allotment process, reports BSS.

The first allotment committee from F-type to wide space houses will be headed by secretary of the ministry. The second committee from D-type to E-type houses will be headed by joint-secretary while the third committee for temporary houses (fixed rent), room and single seated will be headed by director of housing.

According to an official handout yesterday, the government took the initiative to abolish the previous system of house allotment as per instruction of the Housing and Works Minister and the secretary of the ministry.

Earlier, different types of houses were allotted by the government housing department for the officers and employees as per allotment rule of 1982, the handout said. There was resentment among the government officers and employees as the allotment rule of 1982 was not followed in the past, it added.
