IN CONVERSATION WITH DILARA ZAMAN

By Muneera Parbeen

DHAKA was a different place way back then. There were lesser number of rickshaws on the streets, fewer vehicles to pollute the air and very little crime in the neighbourhoods for the citizens to spend sleepless nights about.

"I am very lucky to have seen and grown up with a face of Dhaka that most of us would find unbelievable now," said Dilara Zaman, a versatile actress and revered personality in the country's cultural arena.

Growing up at such a time had its blessings.

As a young girl she was able to roam around the city without her parents losing sleep over her safety. Today she feels that she is able to participate in a wide range of activities mainly because her parents allowed her to get involved in a lot of things because they did not pressure her as most parents do now.

Dilara grew up in Jessore and spent the beginning of her adolescent years there. Life was very simple way back then, there were no television to watch, access to radio programmes were also limited, she says.

"What we did was play outdoor games as bouchi, burichui, kanamachi, ekka dokka etc. Our parents did not have to worry about our safety outside, so we were free to roam around a long distance away from home. But there were still some limits and we all had to be back home by sunset."

However unlike the young children of today, Dilara thinks that they were not confined within the four walls of the house. They (young girls of that time) also played a great deal with dolls, getting them to socialise, getting them married, exchanging them with other friends etc. This in a way taught them many things about life in general. Dilara thinks that today's children are not only confined within the house but are also exposed to different situations that bring out the worst in them. Access to TV especially satellite channels expose them to a whole lot of violence and adult material that they are not really able to handle. This she believes is a chief cause for the degradation of moral and social values so prominent today.

Eids and other festivals at the time were spent in great fanfare, and was spent visiting all neighbours and relatives. They were very interested in collecting eidee, but of course it was not so grand like it happens today. An Anaa was a lot to get at that time. Dilara smiles and says, "We never got or even wished for more than one new dress unlike today's kids!"

The naughty girl that she was, she spend more time playing tricks on others. But she was not a tomboy at all.

By the time she was well into her adolescent years, Dilara was in Dhaka with her whole family. Life became busier as Dilara was able to take up more activities to her liking. She went to Bangla Bazaar Girls High School and became a regular member of Khelaghar. She loved her involvement in the cultural activities as dancing, music, poetry recitation and small parts in dramas, which infatuated her. Artist Quamrul Hassan used to teach them rathchhari songs, she remembers and she also brushed up on her dance skills at the time. Her leisure time was spent reading books and listening to radio dramas, and the young girl longed for the days when she would be the star herself. Little did she know at the time that she was well on her way to see her dreams come true.

Dress codes were more restricted at the time and everybody indulged in traditional dressing. Dilara herself restricted herself to only wearing saris after class ten.

When Dilara joined Eden College, things did not change to a great extent and she still kept up her involvement in the cultural items that was so much the centre of her life. She was able to take part in more dramas here, and involved herself heavily in backstage work as well. She became member of various student unions and got heavily involved in stage productions of drama. Although she used to get late everyday as most of the dramas and other cultural programmes would get over at 9.30 pm or later, her parents did not object, and any one of her younger brothers would escort her back home.

Dilara says that her wide experience of life has taught her that life was more simple but fulfilling when she was young. She lived a life where there was very little stress. The society was very progressive and children were given the best of home life and education. According to her today's children miss out on this very much. They are brought up amidst more restrictions because of the deteriorating social condition.

Eids and other festivals at the time were spent in great fanfare, and was spent visiting all neighbours and relatives. They were very interested in collecting eidee, but of course it was not so grand like it happens today. An Anaa was a lot to get at that time. Dilara smiles and says, "We never got or even wished for more than one new dress unlike today's kids!"
