New HYV mustard gains popularity

From Our Correspondent

JAMALAPUR, Nov 30: Cultivation of 'Sonali Sharisa' a new High Yielding Variety (HYV) mustard has become popular among the local farmers, according to the Additional Director of Agriculture Extension Department of Mymensingh zone.

This new variety has been introduced by Bangladesh Agriculture Research Institute (BARI). This variety may produce 2,400 to 2,500 kg per hectare as against 600 to 700 kg per hectare obtained from the existing local variety (Tori 7). The oil recovery of the high yielding SS75 is 44 per cent whereas that of Tori7 is 40 per cent.

The salient feature of this new variety is that it requires two times irrigation per crop, the first prior to sowing stage and the second during flowering stage. The per acre yield can even be increased considerably if sowing is done in time. The timely sowing can also prevent from the attack of diseases. Moreover the plant grows 5 to 6 feet high which can also be used as firewood.

Now the cultivation of Sonali variety of mustard is being done through establishment of demonstration plots in each blocks by the field officials of Agriculture Extension Department under the Crop Diversification Programme (CDP) providing seeds, fertilisers and pesticides.

It may be mentioned here that the total annual requirement of edible oil in the country stands at five lakh metric tons, whereas the present production of edible oil in the country is 1.45 lakh metric tons. The figure leaves a deficit of 3.55 lakh metric tons which is imported every year at the cost of huge foreign exchange. The Agriculture Extension Department has achieved tremendous success in reducing the volume of import of edible oil through CDP.
