Raga Mohanam/Bhupali
Price: Tk 600/-

The Hindustani and Carnatic systems of music are thought to have diverged from a common source around 400 years ago. Today they present a fascinating and subtle contrast, being so similar in their underlying principles and yet so unmistakably distinct. The southern, Carnatic system, relies more on composition and on the codification of rag and tal structures; the northern Hindustani system, placing more reliance on improvisation, emphasises the importance of subtleties of rag-structure in creating particular moods. A number of rags have been exchanged between the two systems, as have other features such as rhythmic variation techniques. Despite this, they remain very much independent systems.
