event Celebrating with The Moon

The Pakistan Women's Association celebrates the Chand Raat

By Saima Islam

TRADITION or culture is a dynamic process; exchange between different cultures opens up a new path for improved cultural relationship. The west has enriched their culture by borrowing many things from the east and the east has done the same. But why do we always talk about the mingling of the east and west? Even in the same region people have their own distinguished customs and rituals that is also interesting and worth sharing.

The Pakistan Women's Association celebrated the Chand Raat on January 7, Ramadan 29. Chand Raat is a traditional pre-Eid celebration by women and young girls in a Pakistani household. The festival is marked by the selected wearing of colourful bangles and painting of intricate henna patterns on the hands, amidst music and dancing.

Pakistan and Bangladesh share a lot of festivals and customs and Eid is one of them. After a month long fasting the moon marks the Almighty's grace and announces the advent of Eid. Every Muslim waits for this moment of happiness hence the mood of festivity prevails at the sight of the moon.

The celebration of the Chand Raat is a part of the long rich tradition of Pakistan. In the old days the Churi Wails used to come with their colourful collection of the bangles and the freshly ground henna on the Chand Raat and went from doors to doors. The women, young and old selected the bangles and put on the henna and the celebration used to go on till the late at night. As the ladies waited for their henna to dry up, they used to sing to pass away the time and those, whose henna was already dried, took part in the dancing. No Chand Raat was complete without the colour of henna and the sweet noise of the glass bangles.

In the modern times the bangles has taken their places at the bright coloured and well-lighted shops but the enthusiasm among the new generation of women have not been dampened in any way. Their interest takes them to these shops and the shops are kept open till the late at night. The freshly ground henna has been replaced by the coned henna, which are easy to apply and dries up quickly without making any mess and that is why it is becoming popular.

The festival was organized at specially brought from Pakistan. Guests included wives of Bangladeshi dignitaries, ladies of the Pakistani community and members of the Dhaka based diplomatic corps. It was a festival of women of all ages and that is why the mother-daughter pairs were specially invited. The specialty of the festival was its accumulation of different generations into one celebration where even the grandmothers and granddaughters had the chance to enjoy the programme together.

The ladies were all in traditional and multihued dresses. Their beautiful presence added to the brightness of the whole celebration. The ladies of the Pakistan Association prepared some dances and songs and when they got started the celebration was in full swing.

"Tonight, we demonstrate for our friends a part of Pakistan's culture, which we share the colourful festive look of the compound. The compound was decorated with diya or small lamps that lighted up the whole atmosphere. Azrak, a traditional Sindh craft was used as a wall hanging. The intricate embroidery, block print and the glittery mirrors brightened the whole room. Rillie another Sindh craft was used as the wall hanging as well. The mastery of applique in Rillie was breath taking. The custom goes, the mothers make these Rillies for their daughter's dowry. Traditional Churris were left here and there and to finish up the touch of festivity, garlands of flowers were put up all around the compound.

The bangles and henna was with the people of Bangladesh through the bond of our glorious religion Islam," said Ghazala Khan. She also added that she is pleased with the result that she has got.

A couple of years ago celebration of the Valentine Day was only a western thing but now a days it has made its place in the mainstream culture. In this time when everybody is busy with their works and ambition a festival will definitely bring in a touch of fresh air specially for the ladies who have rare chances of enjoyment on their own. The celebration of the Chand Raat surely proved the ladies, when they want to, can surely have a very good time.
