“100 Best Pre-Independence Speeches”

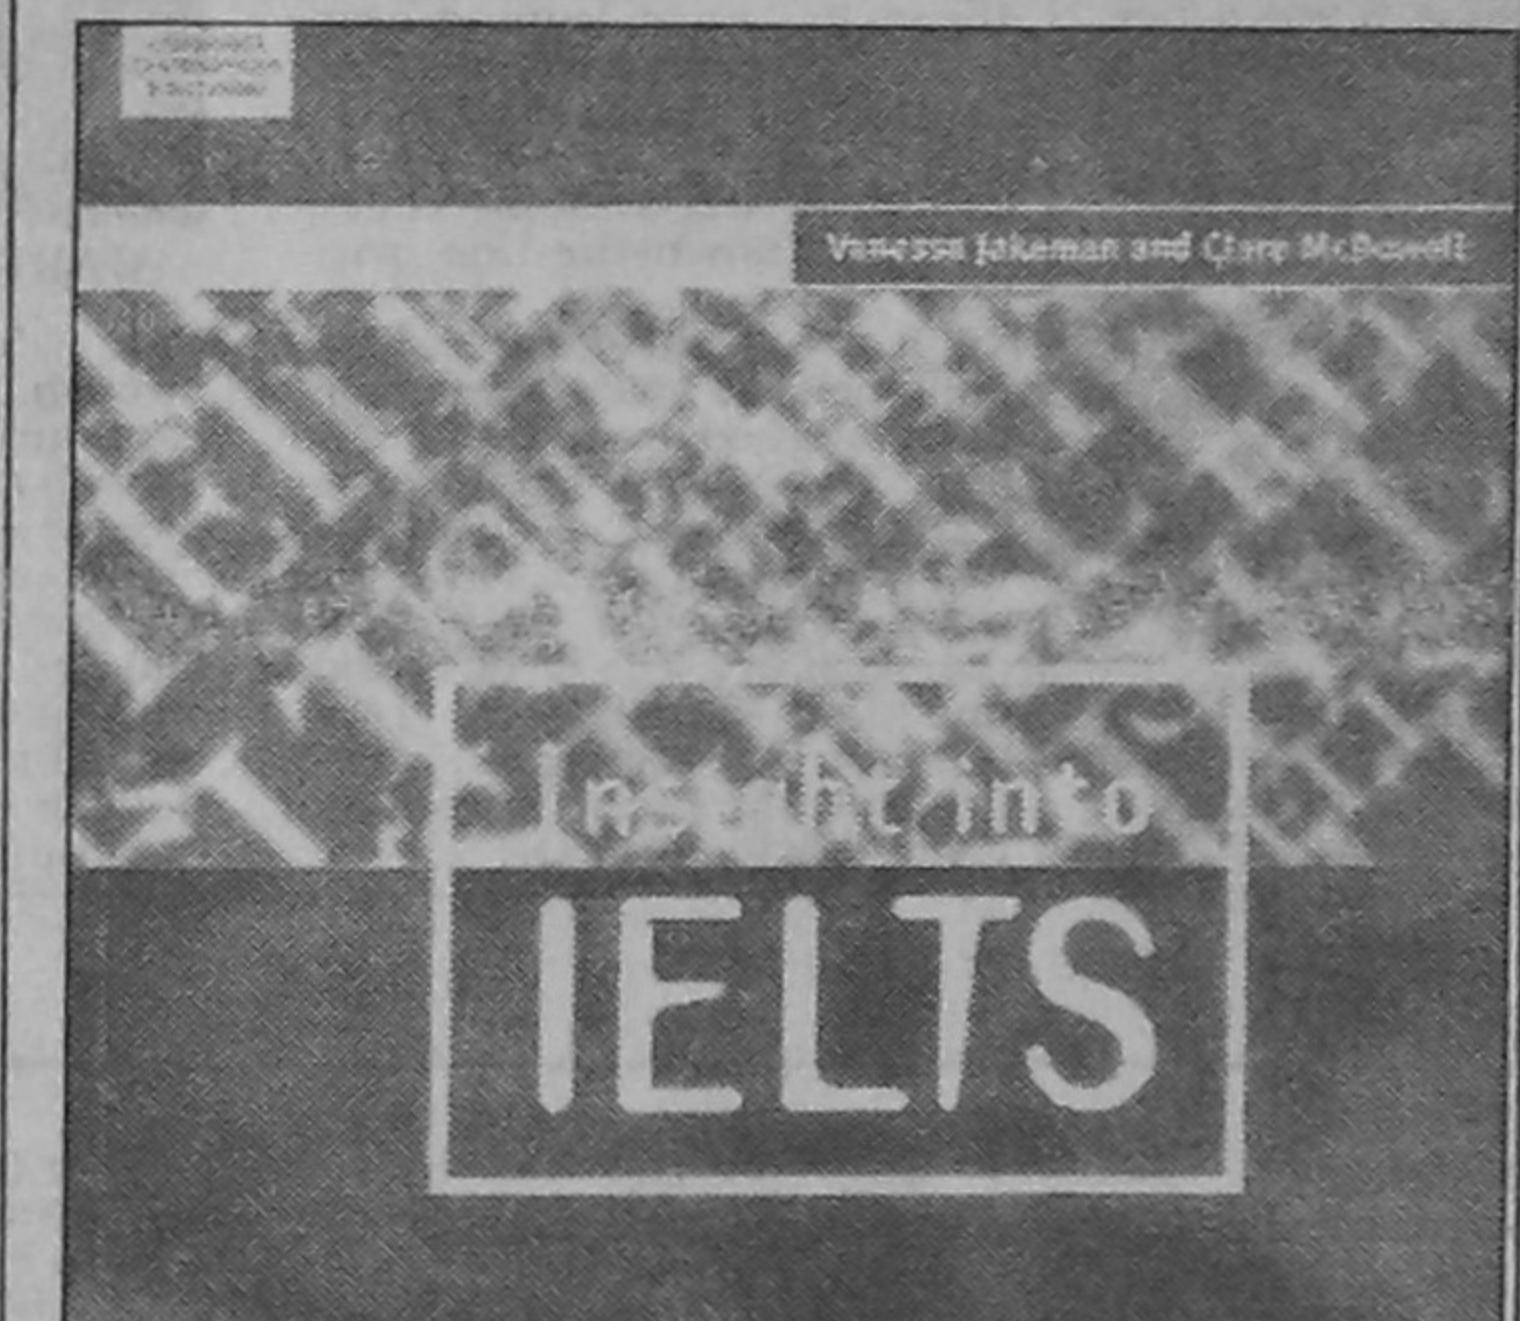

Compiled & Edited by HD Sharma

Publisher: Harper Collins

Price: Tk 593/-

The hundred years spanning the latter part of the nineteenth century up to the first five decades of the twentieth century, was one of the most dramatic and historically important periods India has ever witnessed. The Mutiny of 1857, the freedom struggle, the famed Dandi March and the acts of sacrifice and martyrdom by Mahatma Gandhi and his followers, leading finally to that fateful night of freedom. This volume embodies the 100 best speeches of the period, representing all shades of opinion and facets of Indian life, that is both a source of historical reference as well as of inspiration.

Solo

AT YOUR FAVOURITE
MODHUMITA
RUNNING THIS WEEK

Solo (Mario Van Peebles) is the perfect soldier.

He is a master of combat in all its forms.

He has no family. No friends. No birth certificate. No Social Security number. No medical benefits.

If he is severely wounded, he will be abandoned by his commanders. No one will cry if Solo is gone. Who, after all, would shed a tear for a killing machine?

Which is exactly what Solo is, the very best money can buy. He looks like flesh and blood, but he's made of polymers and computer chips. He is the ultimate covert weapon, except for one thing: This weapon has been programmed to learn.

And what Solo has learned is the value of life ... which is more than enough to put him on a collision course with Col Madden (William Sadler), a man as implacable and pitiless as Solo was designed to be.

Now the two are locked in a contest that will determine not only their fate, but the fate of an entire community of people who have taught Solo what it truly means to be a man.

Mario Van Peebles stars in the science fiction thriller Solo, directed by Norberto Barba from a screenplay by David L. Corley based on the novel Weapon by Robert Mason. The film stars William Sadler, Seidy Lopez, Addison Brody, Abraham J. Verduzco.
