The call money market was also active on Sunday. Loan disbursement for hide and skin procurement and also cash withdrawal before the Eid, gradually reducing the liquidity of the market. As a result there are slight upward trend in call money rates. Today average call rates ranged between 6.5-7.00 per cent level.

In the international market on Friday, a powerful rally on Wall Street propelled the Dollar higher against the Euro after a benign US employment report soothed fears that inflation could derail robust US growth. The European currency tumbled below 96 cents, its weakest level since Monday, when a violent selloff had temporarily swept the 14-month-old euro to lifetime lows near 94 cents. Market sentiment about the European currency remained overwhelmingly bearish and further declines were possible next week. Despite the dollarfriendly data. the market was nervous about pushing the euro aggressively lower, and fears of possible central bank intervention helped prop up the Euro above its record lows. The European Central Bank's decision on Thursday to leave interest rates steady had weighed on the euro against the dollar and the yen posted solid gains against the sagging euro, but the Japanese currency failed to make an impact against the dollar.

The yen would remain in a tight range against the dollar while it consolidating strong mid-week gains. The yen had shot to one-month highs against both the euro and dollar on Wednesday, boosted by a buoyant Japanese stock market and Japanese investors shifting assets home ahead of their fiscal year-end on March 31. As US trade ended down the dollar traded just below 108 yen, virtually unchanged from the previous day's close.

The Swiss franc followed in the euro's footsteps and lost ground against the greenback. Sterling rose against the euro on Friday, capitalising on the losses the single currency suffered against the dollar after a tame US employment report boosted US stocks. Sterling also bounced against the dollar, despite the euro's drop to its lowest against the US currency since Monday when it spiked down to record lows

In New York on Friday, the majors closed against USS at 107.80/107.90 JPY, 1.6739/1.6747 CHF, Euro at $0.9593/0.9597 and GBP at $1.5777/1.5787.
