A Grand Narrative in Black and White

Solo photography exhibition by Anwar Hossain

Canada, July 1978)

By Cultural Correspondent

HERE is something about black and white photography. Somehow they manage to capture reality in a way that coloured photos cannot. It's as if the lens filters out all the fripperies and illusions of life and what you are confronted with is a stark picture of reality that is sometimes more real than reality itself. At least this is the impression one receives when one visits the photo exhibition titled Bangladesh 2000 by renowned photographer Anwar Hossain at the Alliance Francaise gallery.

The exhibition is a nostalgic look back at the life and events surrounding the simple people of Bangladesh in the 70s. Anwar looks into the life of the village people through their various day-to-day activities which one might feel is a statement the photographer wants to make about how he sees life. The beauty of life, Anwar would like to covey, it seems, lies in the mundane activities of dayto-day life.

"Pearls of Labor" is a photo of a man pushing a push-cart with sweat trickling down his back. The beads of sweats on the back of the man fighting his own battle of life captured in away that they appear as pearls. Thus Anwar shows his respect to the nameless people who contribute to the making of a civilization.

In "Mermaids" young village women are seen wading through a pond carrying earthen pitchers. Their wet bodies gleaming in the sun as they walk through the water create a fantastic allusion to the mythical sea creatures whose name the photographer has used to describe the picture.

"Great Expectations" shows two little beggars smiling while standing in front of Hotel Sheraton. The hotel which stands as a symbol of prosperity and affluence, makes a great contrast to the street urchins and holds forth the incongruity in the social situation prevalent in the society.

"Curiosity" is about a little boy peeking through the gap in a bamboo wall. The photographer manages to capture the innocence with which a child regards the world and the innate curiosity that a child has about everything.

"Fishing-Time" shows a truck full of fishermen with all their fishing gear heading towards the river. This photo was taken from another vehicle which was following the truck and Anwar managed the clever trick of photographing himself in the side-view mirror of the vehicle. Both the jumble of fishermen on the truck and the photo trick make this picture very interesting.

All the pictures in the show are pictures of real life, in its most basic and pure level. Anyone who is interested in photography should go and check out these pictures.

The show which began on the 21st will continue till the 31st of this month and is open for all from 5 to 8 pm.

At Kodiak, Michael has a date with the US Coast Guard whose C130 supply aircraft will take him to the most distant island in the Aleutian chain, only a short hop from Russia.

From this point, things start to go wrong. An ill-judged safari into the interior to view Kodiak's great brown bear leaves Michael stranded. He misses the Coast Guard flight by a whisker, and is forced to fly from Anchorage to Petropavlovsk on the last scheduled flight of the season. Michael's final destination in Russia is Vladivostok, ter-
