The Baily Star

Founder-Editor: Late S. M. Ali Dhaka, Tuesday, April 18, 2000

Electoral Reforms

WE are totally in agreement with the Election Commission (EC) about certain electoral reforms that we think must be carried out most urgently. To generate public debate on that urgent issue we have started an interview series from last Sunday of political leaders, which we hope will be followed by leaders of the civil society and the public in general. Following are some of the key areas where urgent reforms are needed:

First, the EC must be greatly strengthened. It should be given its own permanent staff at least down to the district level, financial independence and a much higher public profile. Second, the Election Tribunal must be made more effective and made to determine all the complaints within three months. Another three months should be set aside for appeals. The whole process must, by law, finish within six months of any election. Whatever we need to do to make this possible we should do. Third, the ceiling for election expenses should be raised to Tk 10 lakh from the present three, which everyone knows is not respected. Thus our election begins with a great lie and a fraud. But along with the enhancement of the ceiling, the EC's auditing capacity must also be raised so that returns of expenses by individual candidates must be meticulously audited. Today due to the inadequacy of the EC's auditing capacity most of the expense records submitted to the EC by a candidate after elections remain unexamined. The strategy that EC can adopt is to examine the accounts of the winning candidates on an urgent basis, with that of the rest being attended to immediately afterwards. This will reduce the EC's immediate task to examining only three hundred dossiers, a task that can be accomplished with speed and accuracy. To assist the EC, funds must be made available to enable it to hire outside auditors; the latter in turn could be persuaded to provide services for nominal charge with assurance of tax benefit and positive public image.

The EC's power, to declare any candidate's election invalid if irregularities are detected in the financial statement submitted, must be enforced with determination. The idea of having EC's own financial inspectors who will go around during the campaign time to see on the spot how the candidates are spending their money and submit reports to the EC along with pictures and video clips is worth examining. Here again private auditing houses can be invited to assist for a fee. Once the candidates - those who have won, and those who lost - see that no hanky panky is possible with election expenses imposed by the EC, then much of the financial irregularities will disappear.

The above suggestions are part of a wider pack age of reforms, which the EC has put forward. The FEMA has also put forward a comprehensive set of suggestions. We urge our readers to write to us with their own views on it and create a public demand for electoral reforms, which we think must be undertaken before the next election.

Border of Tension

Our border with India has been the touchline of tension for a reasonably long period of time. We have almost lost count of the incidents of illegal intrusion by Indian Border Security Force (BSF) into the Bangladesh territory through several points along this 16 hundred-mile stretch. The BSF has entered into our territory, stolen cattle and poultry, looted crops, and killed innocent Bangladeshis. The latest incident of killings by the BSF took place on Saturday at Satyanagar in Feni district. Two young men, Ferdaus, 16 and Shah Alam, 25, were gunned down in the morning. Twenty others were also injured in the shooting. The body of Shah Alam, taken away by BSF, was later returned to Bangladesh. This is one of the many incursions that the BSF has made into Bangladesh territory in recent times.

After damages are done and innocent lives lost, normally flag meetings are held between the area commanders of BSF and BDR and we are always at the receiving end — receiving dead Bangladeshis from the BSF. Hardly has our government ever tried to look into these incidents of BSF excess and hardly has there been any attempt to talk this matter over with higher authorities in India. Despite occasional assurances from the Indian leadership, the BSF has continued with their excesses.

We strongly feel that there should be an end to these cross-border incursions by the BSF. The government should hold talks with its Indian counterpart to settle the issue once and for all. Also we expect good neighbourly behaviour from the Indi-

Murders Unchecked

CUDDEN spate of murders in the capital city in The last few days or so could have anyone wondering whether law and order in the country has completely crumbled. Most of the killings reported occurred in broad daylight. On Sunday morning, miscreants shot dead a police constable in the old town. The previous morning, a constable-turned-contractor was gunned down at his own residence in the city's Badda area. Conservative count puts the number of killings, political or otherwise, in the capital city only over the last 15 days at 15; that is, one everyday. Elsewhere in the country, the scenario is more or less the same, if not worse. Also, the recently-published Institute of Democratic Rights' figures on murders during Marcha — a whopping 260 — indicate a progressive deterioration of law and order, not the other way round as the government so happily claim. The overall situation certainly gives rise to concern over the law enforcement mechanism's ability to ensure safety and security of people. The government must wake up to the fact that its much-publicised anti-terrorism and anti-crime drive countrywide has failed to bring about a reversal to the alarming upward trend in the crime curve. With intensification of police operations, the criminals appear to have intensified their activities as well. There is reason to believe that while scores of arrests have been made and illegal weapons recovered, many a criminal has remained beyond the clutches of law. Weighed against the alarming rise in murders over the last few days or months, the success the government claims of its various law enforcement operations would certainly prove inconsequential. The time has surely come for an objective evaluation of the law and order scenario and rethink the government's anti-terrorism and anti-crime strategy.

The Nawaz Sharif Judgement

Quo Vadis, Pakistan?

by Ahmad T. Karim

The international community will have a very important role to play. They must consciously decide now, are they friends of the ordinary people of Pakistan, or of the Pakistani military. In any action they take, they must put those contemplated actions to a litmus test: will such action benefit the military regime, or will it ultimately benefit the needs of the ordinary people of that country. . .

countries inevitably tends to as the legal Head of Governendow the public with very ment, his perceived unpopularperiod for leaders in such circumstances tends to be notori-

HE first phase of Mr.

body blow to the Military regime's expectation. Ham-strung as the judiciary is in Pakistan, the judgment reflects a fine balance between pander-ing to some extent the Military Establishment's objectives, and satisfying to some extent the demands of justice and fairplay as well. Given the constraining parameters within which the institution of the judiciary in Pakistan has developed in the last 53 years, that Mr. Sharif has not been awarded the death sentence is in itself an act of bravery on the part of the judge. The last time a Pakistani Prime Minister was on the docks on a capital charge, the judgment was a foregone conclusion. I have heard stories in Pakistan that the late, but hardly lamented, General Ziaul Huq is said to have commented: " I see clearly one noose before me but two necks, and it is not mine which is going to go in that noose!" Mr.

self to many, by his arrogance, authoritarianism and his dubious role in the events of 1970-71 which led to the break-away of Bangladesh from Pakistan. But all said and done, as has been commented here in this country, his execution was simply "judicial murder". Many may, passing of Mr. Bhutto, but his friends and foes alike did mourn the demise of justice in off this time, between another civilian Prime Minister, and his appointed Chief of Army Staff is certainly palpable and striking. With one exception — this time, the civilian Prime Minister was elected with a clear majority by the people, and he continued to hold a commanding majority in the people's parliament. It is another matter that he had become so vastly unpopular. However, popularity is at best a passing phase for almost any leader in most developing and poor countries. The magnitude and dimension of the problems of poverty-ridden countries

THE latest allegations of have sent shockwaves through the world of cricket. Hansie Cronje's confession that he accepted $15,000 to pass on "information" to a bookie has shell-shocked fans who admired him as an honourable, come completely clean. The idea that a racket could be run

And yet, Cronje has not

God-fearing man.

match-fixing involving

South African players

The similarity in the stand-his case.

Bhutto had not endeared himwer. The judgment is a Nawaz Sharif's trial is been given "the lesser sentence". If anything, a closer damning indictment of the Military, for the judge concedes: a) that the murder case brought by the prosecution question was allowed to land for refueling: b) that all the other co-accused with him were not guilty or may not, have mourned the and he therefore acquitted against Mian Nawaz Sharif was not tenable since the plane in

c) that when the alleged offense of attempting to hijacking was committed, at that time the said offense was "not a schedule offense" under the terms of the original Notification of the Law, but retrospectively included by the amendment to the original notification on December 2, 1999;

d) that "the then Prime Minister of Pakistan, who was Defense Minister also, came to know that his authority was eroded by some few army soldiers, therefore he has reacted in this manner" and committed the said offence "at the spur of the moment and in the heat of countries of South Asia but his elected government, or for particularly in Pakistan, are so taking an ill-judged action "at mortal leader can deliver any the heat of passion"? My laymiracles. The pressures of sur- man's commonsense translates. In the South Asian tradition, vival in such problem-ridden that as meaning that Mr. Sharif such leaders do not simply fade short memories, and they end ity notwithstanding, was up demonizing, after relatively merely taking defensive action short spans of time, the very in averting a coup d'etat, an illeaders they themselves had legal act, by the Army Chief of idolized earlier and raised to Staff who is supposed to be subhigh pedestals. The honeymoon ordinate to and loyal to the constitutionally elected govin Pakistan has transformed ernment. The charge on which Mr. Nawaz Sharif has been I am no legal expert, but convicted is, I presume, itself reading through the text of the open to ridicule by any clever judgment I am struck by the criminal lawyer. Moreover, as tongue-in-cheek manner in some mischievous people in which Mr. Nawaz Sharif has Pakistan have pointed out, the General's plane could have landed in any of the country's reading of the sentence is a several military bases, had the General so chosen, since he so thoroughly controlled the levers of military power as demonstrated by him as soon as he landed. So was the whole exercise in indicting him with needs time, and a great deal of those specific charges a con- investment in education and spiracy, as Mrs. Kulsoom Nawaz, the wife of the hapless developing intrinsic resilience.

never be sure that it is not, since the history of that country is replete with instances of "conspiracies" cooked up by highly imaginative minds in the military or quasi-military establishment, to suppress any perceived civilian encroachments upon their exclusive turf. The General and his regime are not likely to let this case go. Their own survival is at stake here. The co-accused who were leased yet. Both parties can, and will, appeal against the judgment to the Sindh High Court first, and then to the Supreme Court. In the meantime, if Mr. Sharif's brother, So what exactly has the Mr. Shahbaz Sharif, who is the "then Prime Minister who was real political animal in the defense minister also" been Sharif family, is allowed to go with big populations outpacing convicted of? For trying to free, he might well succeed in economic growth, like in the stave off an illegal coup against re-inventing his brother's image as a martyr figure over a period of time, and once again complex and so vast, that no the spur of the moment and in rally and polarize popular support around Mr. Nawaz Sharif.

away, and today's villains can well bounce back as tomorrow's heroes. Remember Mrs. Indira Gandhi, who was written off in 1977? It took her less than a year to return with triumph to center stage.

The Military Establishment into a law unto itself, right from the very birth of Pakistan in 1947. Pakistan's political institutions have been so weakened by the rapacity of the Military that, contrary to what the Military claim as an excuse for their latest coup, 10 years were not enough for the democratic process to establish sustainable roots and take off on a mature course. Democracy is a process, and every country must evolve it to suit its own genius and needs. Institution building public awareness programs, for Prime Minister has openly con- The democracies in the Western contain them by pampering world also evolved through them, while at the same time their own processes, taking centuries before graduating and transforming gradually from feudalism to people's power. Pakistan is still very, very far away from such a defining moment. Its politics is still overwhelmingly feudal based. And the Military Establishment, in collusion often with an elitistbased bureaucracy, never really gave the process a fair chance. The paramountcy of the army acquitted have not been re- in Pakistan is directly antithetical to the growth and development of the democratic process in that country. The army's raison d'etre is the threat perception from and continuing confrontation with India. Therefore, it has deeply-entrenched vested interest in keeping active, and prolonging, this confrontation. If a civilian, or even a quasi-civilian government, even with limited mandate of the people, dared to edge towards a rapprochement with the enemy, the army would immediately scuttle such ef-the government. And every successive military rule has only resulted in turning the clock back. Every successive conflict. or confrontation in an arms race, or missile race, or the nuclear race, with India has dragged the country's economy further down, leaving progressively less and less for the country's economic development and societal needs. The Military has always ignored the basic truth that if the economy was in shambles, it was largely so because of pandering to the jingoism of the extreme right and the Military. pouring the bulk of the nation's resources into an arms and missile race, and finally the nuclear race as well. If anything, these were really the root cause for the country's endemic economic malaise. Perhaps Nawaz Sharif was playing a desperate balancing game, trying to keep the military and the right fringe happy, hoping to proceeding as fast as he could to normalizing relations with India, which was part of his popular mandate anyway. It did not work. Appeasing fanaticism, or megalomania, never does. Remember Munich? Much has been written in the Pakistan and international media about the sighs of relief and joy, which greeted the coup in Pakistan. Of the wide unpopularity of the Prime Minister. The undisputed fact remains that Nawaz Sharif was an elected Prime Minister, the first itary regime, or will it ultione in Pakistan's history to mately benefit the needs of the vincing mandate. He was the country, in building their devrogative of hiring or firing the which, in the ultimate analysis, service chiefs. But as has hap- is the best security of any state. pened so often in Pakistan, the tail wagged the dog. The mili- The author is former Ambastary coup was illegal. Merely sador of Bangladesh to Iran, having indulged in it so often in Lebanon, and South Africa. He the past and quoting precedence is presently a visiting scholar does not give it legal status or as "Distinguished Internajustify it. If military coups tional Executive in Residence" the problems of a country or its peoples, its virtues would have supplanted democratic, or other institutions of governance in many parts of the world. We would still have Marcos in the Philippines, and Suharto in Indonesia, and an Abacha in Nigeria, and many more such dictators in other African. Asian and Latin American countries.

The instruments of fanaticism which Pakistan helped create in Afghanistan are now, like the proverbial chicken, all coming home to roost. Rumblings of how little General Musharraf has progressed on his many promises, all old wine in new bottles, are beginning to be muttered. The General is riding a tiger, and therein lies the danger, for this will leave him with no option but to cling on desperately to it and prolong his ride for as long as he can. Because of the information revolution, the time span between rumblings and outright outbursts of dissent is, however. likely to become progressively telescoped. The General may not get as much time as his illustrious predecessors did, the eleven years of Ziaul Huq. or the ten years of Ayub, or even the less than three years of Yahya Khan. So we shall, in all likelihood, witness more attempts on the part of the General to roll back the judgment, to deny the Sharif family an opportunity to re-invent themselves as political entities to reckon with and bounce back to center-stage in Pakistan.

Given the situation, the international community will have a very important role to play. They must consciously decide now, are they friends of the ordinary people of Pakistan, or of the Pakistani military. In any action they take, they must put those contemplated actions to a litmus test will such action benefit the milhave been elected with a con- ordinary people of that hapless Head of government, and in astated institutions and giving that capacity, he had the pre- them an intrinsic resilience forts, if necessary by removing could have been the panacea to University of Maryland, USA.

Cronje, Cricket, Corruption

The Real Game is Money

Praful Bidwai writes from New Delhi

In cricket-in-action, three processes are played out simultaneously. There is the sport, of course. Then, there is the money game. And there is the reproduction and perversion of values that define our elite. Cricket's popularity is explained partly by the aesthetics of the game, and partly by voyeurism. Many people without great athletic prowess play the game and can substitute themselves for the players. That popularity is also driven by glamour, and by cricket's function as a vehicle of nationalism.

by bookmakers only for match "forecasting," not match-fixing, defies credibility. up murky dealings, including The ongoing debate should the Chandrachud inquiry, have silence those who refuse to beonly damaged the inquirer's lieve that "wholesome", proper reputation. No one can now premiddle class or wealthy people tend that cricket is clean or lily playing a "gentlemanly" game white-if it ever was. cannot indulge in corruption Such cleanliness as there ing in raised its visibility, audiwhich is associated with the might have been disappeared ence and commercial profile. unwashed masses lacking in when the white flannels of slow education and samskara or five-day tests were replaced by with the Laloo Yadavs. All eviluridly coloured uniforms emdence—and there is a good deal, blazoned with corporate logos. including telephone tapes-For a quarter-century, compoints to the opposite. merce has ruled cricket. Clearly, a no-holds-barred international investigation into match-fixing has become the ex-colonial Anglophone necessary. This must be conducted in the face of stiff resisthe words of C.L.R. James, West tance and gung-ho nationalism associated with sports. theoretician of the sport, An organised international cricket has been "first and racket involving speculators. foremost a dramatic spectacle. bookmakers and top-class It belongs with the theatre, balcricketers seems to have been in let, opera and dance."

signs appeared in 1981 when That opened cricket to com-Rod Marsh and David Lillee mercial interests, especially with the spread of television. The decisive change came with Kerry Packer's efforts to detach closures by Manoj Prabhakar, the game from test matches. and quicken its pace. Television Chris Lewis, Wasim Akram and freed cricket from its locational dependence, providing a better One-day cricket betting per view of dramatic moments than match in India alone is said to the naked eye.

One-day cricket greatly ininvolve Rs 1,000 crores, or 100 creased the availability of the times more than gambling on sport as a consumable commodthe Derby. Bookies offer multiple options: side-bets, sub-bets, ity. Its audience ballooned into spread bets... Attempts to cover scores of millions and became the advertiser's prime target. Corporate sponsorship became the "natural" form of business incursion into cricket. Cricket's internationalisation with Zimbabwe and Sri Lanka com-scope for "star" performances. So it becomes especially amenable to commercial exploitation not just through sponsorship but also gambling. tion.

The exceptional importance Long ago, cricket burst upon of subjective and intangible fac- mimics the evolution of the Intors - individual skills. dian elite, with its growing corworld as a spectator sport. In weather and ground conditions, poratisation, avarice, and other "glorious uncertain- amenability to influence, indi-Indian scholar and pioneering ties" - also facilitate specula- vidualism, and moral debasetion. From here, it is but a ment. Like other elite institusmall step to corruption. tions such as stockmarkets, ex-Bribery is nothing but business clusive schools or posh clubs. "by other means" come models of greed, ready to violate the collective interest for personal self-aggrandisement. The dramatic rise and equally dramatic decline of Sri Lankan cricket is the story of sheer greed ruining the game.

Even more malign has been the influence of cricket control Cricket offers enormous boards. These are the preserve not of genuine patrons of the game, but of devious powerbrokers. They too are more susceptible to corporate manipula-

In all this, cricket reflects or cricket structures also dutifully Many cricketers too have be- reflect compromised values. If you embrace the geed creed, and buy your membership of the gymkhana with Rs. 10 lakhs in black money, then what's wrong with making a few lakhs through corruption? As Manoj Prabhakar says: "Why will anyone want to win a match for a mere Rs. 1 lakh when they can earn 20 times more for losing it?" of the game, and partly by win. voyeurism. Many people without great athletic prowess play the game and can substitute themselves for the players. That popularity is also driven by glamour, and by cricket's function as a vehicle of nation-

The commercialisation of sports has three major consequences. It makes sports universally vulnerable to malpractices like match-rigging. This means sports must be decorporatised and limits placed on sponsorship and fees/bonuses.

Secondly, we have unwittingly become victims of the controllers of the sports business and media. They decide which game to promote and how. They ran down a great game like hockey, while hyping up golf. Tomorrow, it might be the turn of polo or baseball. We'll still be consuming whatever is promoted - passively.

And third, sports will increasingly lose the two things that make them attractive to ordinary people. The first is the In cricket-in-action, three thrill in using one's physical processes are played out simul- and mental skills in controlled taneously. There is the sport, of and innovative ways. Winning course. Then, there is the a game is as important as playmoney game. And there is the ing it well - even while losing reproduction and perversion of The second is the unique ability values that define our elite. of sports to do "poetic" justice. Cricket's popularity is ex- In real life, the underdog loses. plained partly by the aesthetics On the playground, s/he can

Continued corporatisation of sports will leave no room for such role reversal, for imagination itself. That would be a far graver tragedy than match-fix-

The Two Koreas, the Summit and the Dilemma

by Ekram Kabir

Korean President and North Sudan. Korean leader Kim Jong II in international politics.

Powers like Japan, US, China and Russia have welcomed the initiative, saying that if the summit is actually held, it would be "epoch making". BBC's Caroline Gluck reports security and political turmoils there are many difficult issues related to North Korea? that need to be resolved between the two sides, "but the breakthrough is seen as a historic chance" to end the world's remaining legacies of the cold war. Indeed, these cold-war rivals are technically still at war after their three-year bitter conflict in the 1950s ended in a truce. And so far the West is concerned, it may only look

The schedule, however, is a resumption of a summit planned six years ago, in 1994 when Kim Jong Il's father, Kim Il Sung, was to meet Kim Young different angle. A certain "de-Sam of the South. But that never happened because of the sudden death of Kim Il Sung just 17 days before the summit.

mains of the cold war.

OR a long time, especially rea, the last outpost of Stalin- came just days before general increase the number of diplosince the end of the cold ism, continue to persist. For war, North and South example, South Korea, America Koreas have kept the world and Japan met last month to guessing on their relationship, coordinate policies regarding However, the announcement of what to do about North Korea. first-ever summit meeting of They are all concerned about its the two Koreas, since the missile production. Moreover, it peninsula was divided in 1945, is also believed that Pyongyang did not come as a surprise. But is working with Iraq to build a this historic meet of South new ballistic missile plant in

But in recent months, this tion. Pyongyang scheduled for June secretive Stalinist state has be-12-14 this year may gun to show signs of coming demonstrate some major out of its diplomatic isolation. strengthened its position as the changes and newer tensions in In doing so, Pyongyang held a series of high-level talks with Tokyo and Washington. And, given the latest announcement. that seems to bear results.

June summit herald an end to Nobody is sure, say the Korea observers, and more events not been received without scepforward to removing the re- ticism among analysts. The decision for summit may seem like a fundamental shift in inter-Korean relations, but the timing and haste in which the decision was made suggest a elections were due, on April 13, mats stationed overseas. in South Korea, President Kim Dae Jung has been criticised to have taken advantage in showing that his North Korea policy is paying off. As a statement of South's opposition Grand National Party was quoted by the BBC: "No regime in history has turned to such a blunt and shameless trick to win an elec-

However, the gloom did not last as the Grand National Party biggest party in parliament in last Thursday's general elections. And the Millennium Party of President Kim Dea Jung did win some extra support in some Now, the question is: will the areas after the news of the historic summit with North Korea.

On the other side, it is a chance for North's Kim Jong to show that it is the South's policy that has worked and Pyongyang was not under duress while agreeing to hold the summit. Kim Jong Il is not without trouble as well. There are splits within the North Korean government on foreign policy issues that are likely to . stir controversy in Pyongyang. For example, in 1998, as Kim Jong Il took power, Pyongyang began to reduce its diplomatic overseas staff by 30 per cent. until "food and economic problems" in the country were solved. At the same time, there were several (unconfirmed) rependence" between "government ports in the western media that factions" in North Korea and the North Korea was under a near party of Kim Dae Jung in the state of martial law following an South seemed obvious. The op- attempted military coup. By positions to this development in the end of 1998 and into early 1999. North Korea had again

North Korean officials, with reported deep links to the economic opening to the South. wished to see the Kim Dae Jung government remains intact, or they may lose their power. Kim Dae Jung's own party has been relying on the apparent softening of North Korea's regime to retain its mandate in the South. Pyongvang has repeatedly fought over its diplomatic policy, particularly whether to remain isolated -and thus insulated -- from the rest of the world. This struggle may again be coming to a head. analysts expect, prompting the sudden announcement of the leader's meeting as a way to legitimise the role of those advocating economic ties in the face of the isolationists.

Now, does this "mutual dependency" indicate the collapse of North Korea? If so, then how would its neighbours and other powers react to that?

The collapse may start a huge refugee influx across the borders into South Korea, Russia and China. And then, since the US maintains a military presence in the South, there could be a serious escalation of tension between China and the US. The emergence of a unified Korea would cause deep unease in Beijing. It remains to be seen whether these powers are looking at this summit, as BBC's Caroline Gluck said, as a historic chance "to end the world's remaining legacies of the cold war" or they want something more from it.

To the Editor ...

'Call for more research on war of liberation operation for years. Its first openly betted against their own side! Since then, there have been serious match-fixing dis-

Shane Warne and Tim May,

Salim Malik.

Sir, I read with great interest, your article "Call for more research on war of liberation' published on 2nd April 2000.

Although, I praise this recent initiative to seek facts about the liberation war of Bangladesh, I must stress that it is imperative that those who pursue the truth do not distort history in order to project their personal or political persuasions. The present government, for example, continually states that the previous governments distorted the truth of 1971 war, yet they themselves are guilty of projecting their own image and omitting the valiant efforts of those individuals from the opposition parties who fought for our country's independence. It is well documented that certain Freedom Fighter Officers took part in the removal of the democratically elected government of 1975; but that was a different chapter of our country's history. For the sake of posterity, let Noyatola the truth be known otherwise Md Minhaj Uddin the future generation will hold 417/A, Noyatola, Mogbazar us responsible. Abdul M. Ismail

100 Greenhill Road, Mossley Liverpool L18 7HN England, UK

Repair work required

Sir, It is a matter of great regret that we, the inhabitants of Noyatola area have been suffering severely due to lack of proper sewerage system. Even though we have been paying our taxes and bills regularly, for the last two years our sewerage line have been completely out of order. And the DCC surface drains are now being used for disposal of sewer. This is indeed a threat to the environment and civic health. If the sewerage system breaks down completely, the impact would be severe.

Under these circumstances. we urge the authorities concerned to take immediate steps to sort out this problem.

On behalf of the inhabitants of Even long after the end of bipolarism in the global power axis, concerns about North Ko-will unfold once the South Korean parliamentary elections are over and the two sides discuss the details of the summit later this month. While they do so, the timing of the announcement of the summit has both the Koreas are also clear. Since the announcement reversed the course, seeking to