Chandra Shekhar Dey's exhibition at Gallery 21

Chandra Shekhar portrays his memories and intertwines them with the present. Bengali history plays an important role in his paintings. He identifies with the changes in Bengal's history. A witness to those times, he depicts in his paintings, not only struggle and hope, but also changes in lifestyles; changes in people. particularly the way women dressed.

Chandra Shekhar Dev's exhibition is a combination of fragmented memories and the fast paced world of today.

His paintings mirror "conflicting moods" as well, apparent from his use of colour. There are two paintings displayed side by side. One is completely black and the other bright orange.

About his black and white drawings, he says: "I've used different styles in doing these. Some may well be termed as a 'brush exercise' since use of brush is what is important in them. Then, I've used thin brushes to draw fine figures. Here, I gave myself the freedom to be spontaneous and flexible. I've drawn figures as well, both using and not using models. Some are illustrative and I have enjoyed doing them. I don't believe that illustrations are always commercial. If I use the language to express myself and use it creatively, then I see no wrong."

Some figures look as though they are foreign. On this, he said: "If they do seem foreign, then I don't know! I haven't consciously drawn foreign figures. But I acknowledge that the many European books we have come across and the movies we have seen may have had an in- The Sin

Another girl, perhaps a sister or friend, seated by her is adorned in what we call the 'clothes of today'.
