An Attempt to Understand Our Time

Pratikular Jatri, a documentary on the father figure of our alternative film movement Alamgir Kabir and the turbulent time that shaped the man

By Ziaul Karim

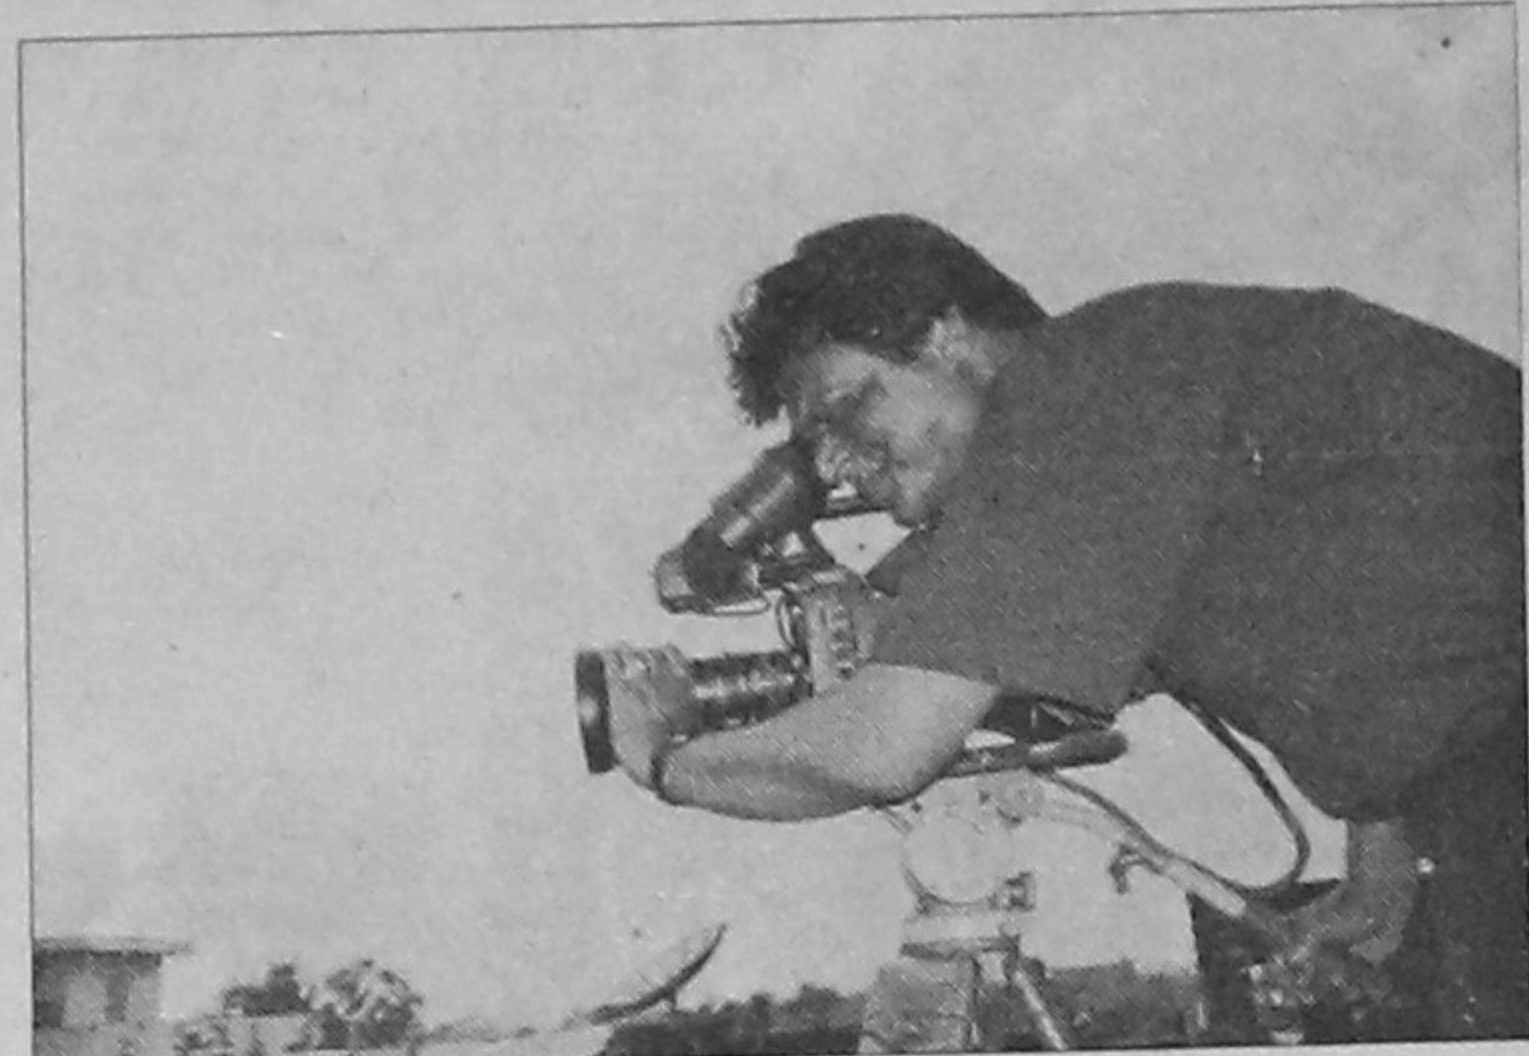

ONCE a key figure in our alternative film movement, admired for his magnanimous ability to understand the urgency of time and when necessary quick to supply solidarity to political causes, Alamgir Kabir has, a decade after his death, seem almost faded from view. A well-made documentary aired on channel 1 on May 13 reshaped our faded memory of a man of great zeal and activism.

Titled Pratikular Jatri, meaning against all odds, the documentary by Kawser Chowdhury truly captures the spirit of the man who teamed up with legendary Zahir Raihan to make a bravado of a documentary Stop Genocide that features the atrocities committed against the civilian population in 1971 by the erstwhile Pakistani army. The historic documentary followed the homeless millions on their long, arduous, and painful journey to bordering India.

Kudos are due for Kawser for the way he handled the life and works of a personality as colourful and interesting as Alamgir Kabir. He has interviewed at least a dozen people who came in close contact with Kabir at various points of career and known him personally. What made the interviews worth listening to is Kawser's conscious effort to understand the man through as many eyes as possible. Tanvir Mokammel, an accomplished film-maker, spoke about how Kabir incorporated current political and social events in his films and reflected upon his film style. Syed Shamsul Haq, one of our front-ranking poet and fiction-writer, who was Kabir's contemporary at Dhaka College School in the 40s narrated his interest for carpentry as an optional subject stressing to the fact that he was not like others from a very early age. Educationist Nilima

Ibrahim reflected upon the personal life of Kabir his loneliness and about his failed marriages.

For a renowned film-maker like Mrinal Sen he was a dedicated film activist who sowed the seeds of alternative film movement and inspired successive generations of film-makers.

Through the words of Abdul Al Mamun, a noted playwright and celebrated actor, we learned how dispassionate he was as a film and theatre critic. When was riding high on the waves of accolade, Kabir through his column in Express, a tabloid he edited, critically reviewed his plays commenting they are nothing but trash.

Bulbul Ahmad, who featured in most of films as a hero, talked about his acting method. Kabir as a film-maker always emphasised on informal acting.

Alamgir Kabir

Watching the documentary is not only learning about a fore-runner of our film movement and one of our gifted film-makers, it is also a fantastic commentary of those turbulent times of our history - the language movement of 1952, the six-point charter of demand in the 60s, the mass upsurge of 1979 and all those events culminating into the war of independence in 1971 - that shaped the man. Kawser Chowdhury is successful in sewing the personal history of Alamgir Kabir with that of the national history.

All in all the documentary has more grace to write home about than failures. But finger should also be pointed at the loose ends. One observation is that it is not tightly edited and among a bevy of people interviewed Alamgir's wives were not featured.
