Perspective on Contemporary Bengali Arts

Professor Henry Glassie discusses on "The dilemma of the modern for the traditional artists in Bangladesh"

By Saima Islam

THE Library Hall of the Centre for Study of Bengal Art (ICSBA) was filled with listeners on the pleasant afternoon of May 19, Professor Henry Glassie of the Indiana University Bloomington, USA talked on "The dilemma of the modern for the traditional artists in Bangladesh" on the 19th seminar of the Centre.

Dr. Glassie the author of 'Art and Life in Bangladesh' has been working in Bangladesh since 1987. "I write," he says, "to introduce you to the people of Bangladesh through their art and to use their art to exemplify the study of creativity in its own contexts as part of a general inquiry in to the human condition".

Dr. Glassie has visited Bangladesh many times and had the opportunity to work very closely with the potters, weavers and many such artists scattered all over Bangladesh. His work has taken him to the distant villages of Feni, Savar and many more so, when he speaks on art of Bangladesh he speaks from his first hand experience.

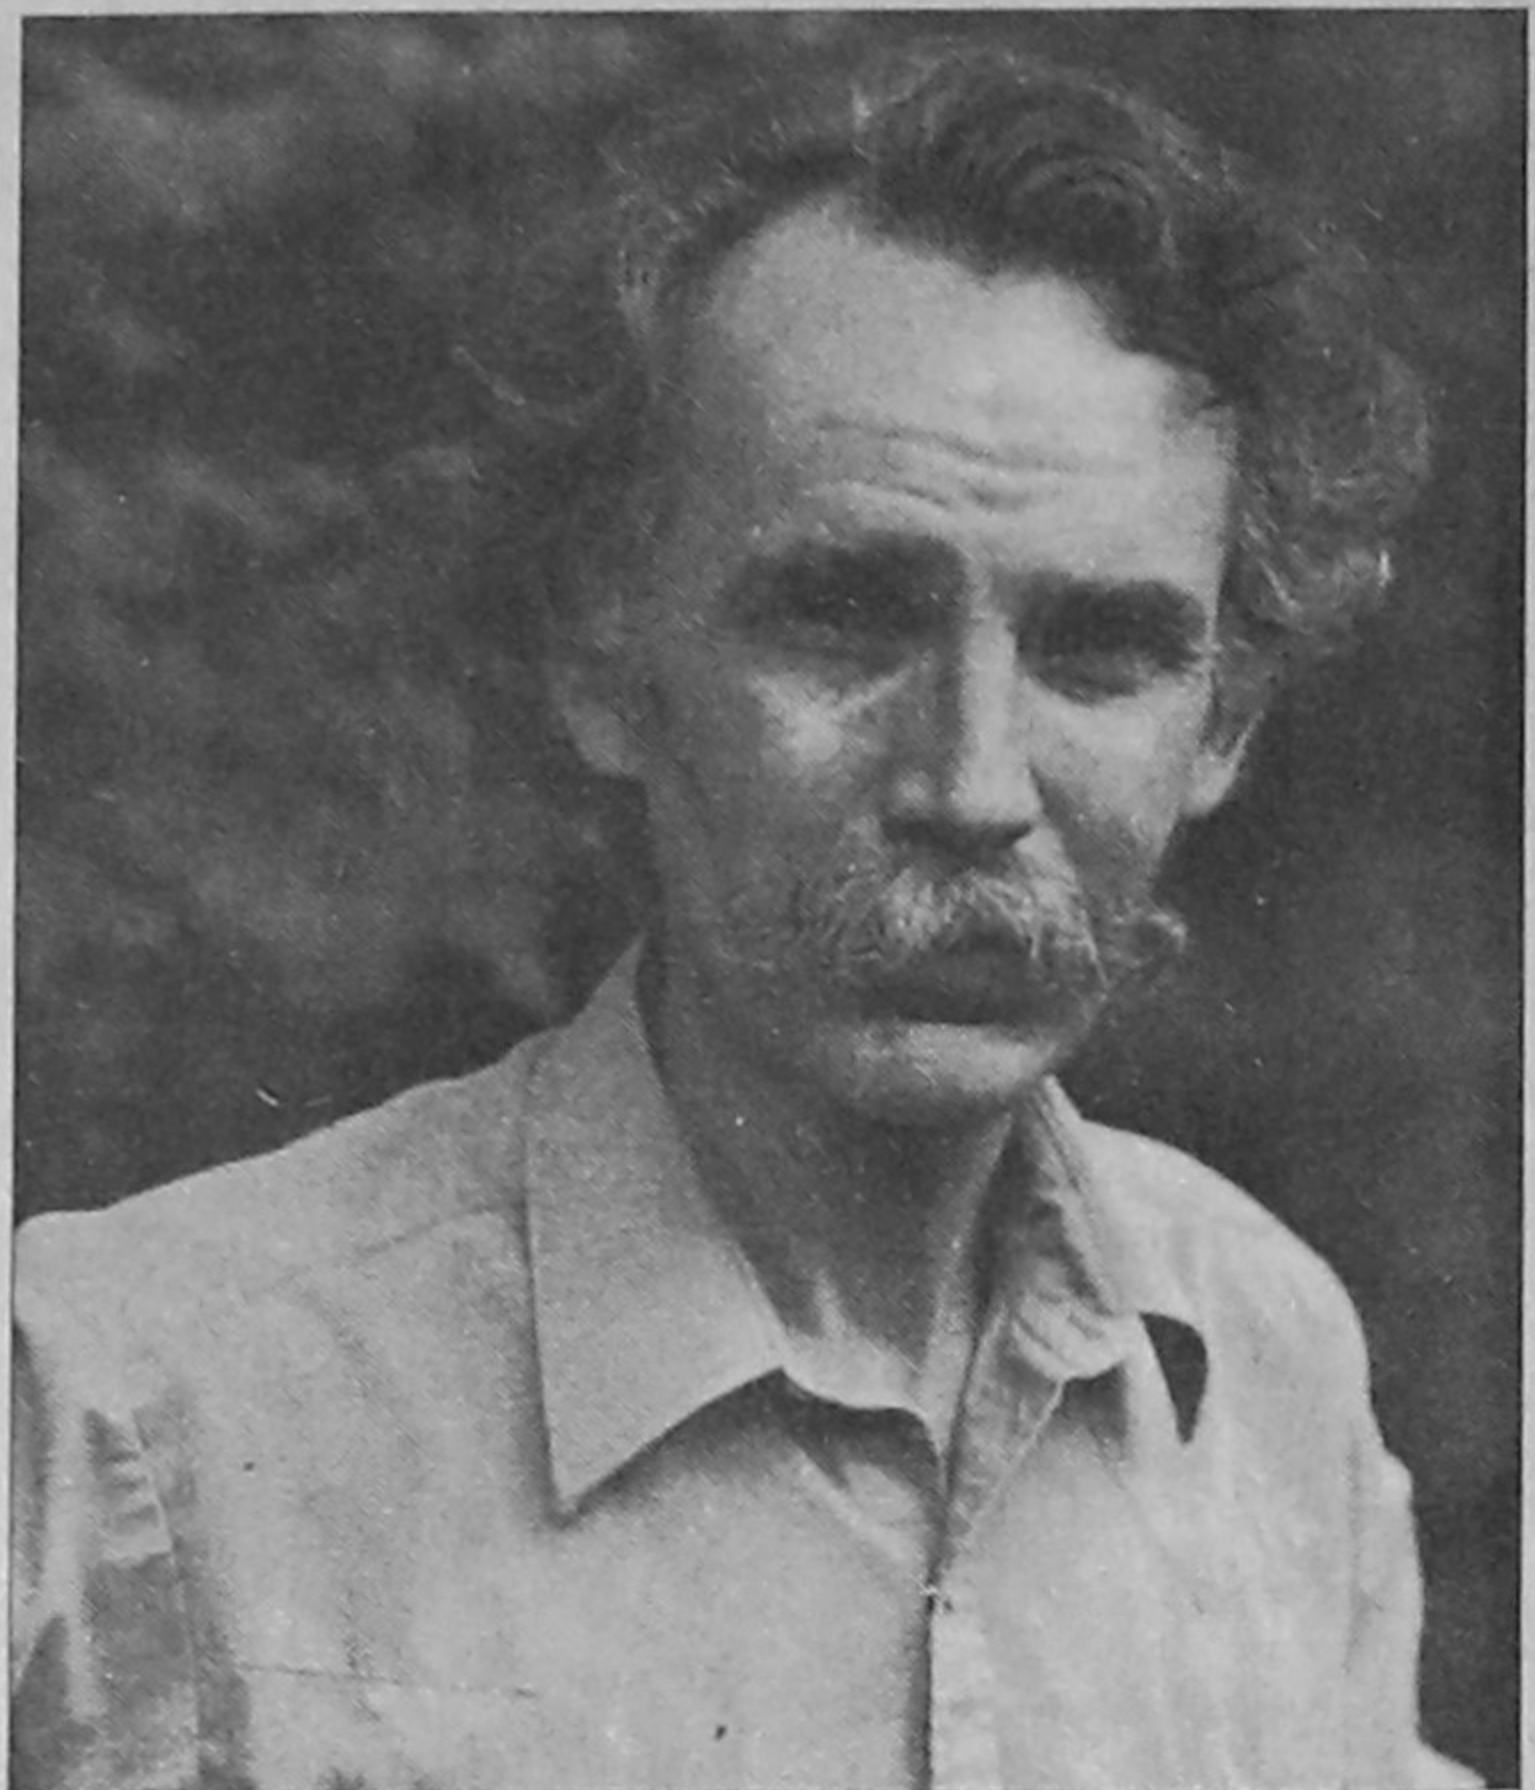

Dr. Enamul Haque, Chairman and Academic Director of the Centre began the discussion by welcoming everyone. He said, "Over the years Bangladesh has gained a reputation as a rural country. But the concept is changing very fast as communication has improved a great deal. Our countryside is being exposed to many western-developing organizations in recent times. Dr. Glassie will shed light on the changes these have brought upon the artists of Bangladesh".

Dr. Glassie began his speech by quoting from Eliot where he said, "All art is traditional". According to the Professor, all the artists from all over the world has the same creative urge, which inspires them to create and which reflects their traditional background. To him the potters of the Kazi Para reflect as much tradition as Michael Angelo or an artist of New York. He cited the example of Haripada Pal, a potter, as one of the greatest artist in the world who could earn up to 75 thousand dollars a year if he lived in USA. The economic, geographical, academic or any such factors do not really matter because an artist is an artist despite everything.

Haripada Pal creates his pieces out of love for his art. His energy transcends in to his works and a new Haripada Pal is born through his works. Pal's works show a beautiful fusion of the spiritual with creativity. Dr. Glassie says, "In that moment of creation all the artists are one".

Dr Henry Glassie

But with the changing time, materialism has spread its influence on art and the artists, some of which are good and some are bad. According to the Professor, modern art is done out of greed not out of love. The artists end up making things for money.

He remembered a village where potters used to make water pots, 'Kolshi' but with time they switched to making flowerpots. 'Phooler Tob'. Dr. Glassie said that he has noticed how the whole village bore the depressed overtone of this materialistic change; the men did not seem to find pleasure in their jobs anymore and left the task to the women. This, to him is the simple story of death of art in a capitalistic system.

How can a pretty woman in sari, living in Bangladeshi village compete with 'Globalisation'? Consumers do not want to buy clay kolshis instead they want to buy flowerpots. "My 13 years of research in Bangladesh showed me that capitalism kills useful crafts".

But there is a whole different angle to this story as well. The wealthy consumers like to collect and display. Here comes the exquisite piece of art like, Jamdani. The Jamdani makers of Rupshi depend on the their rich clientele.

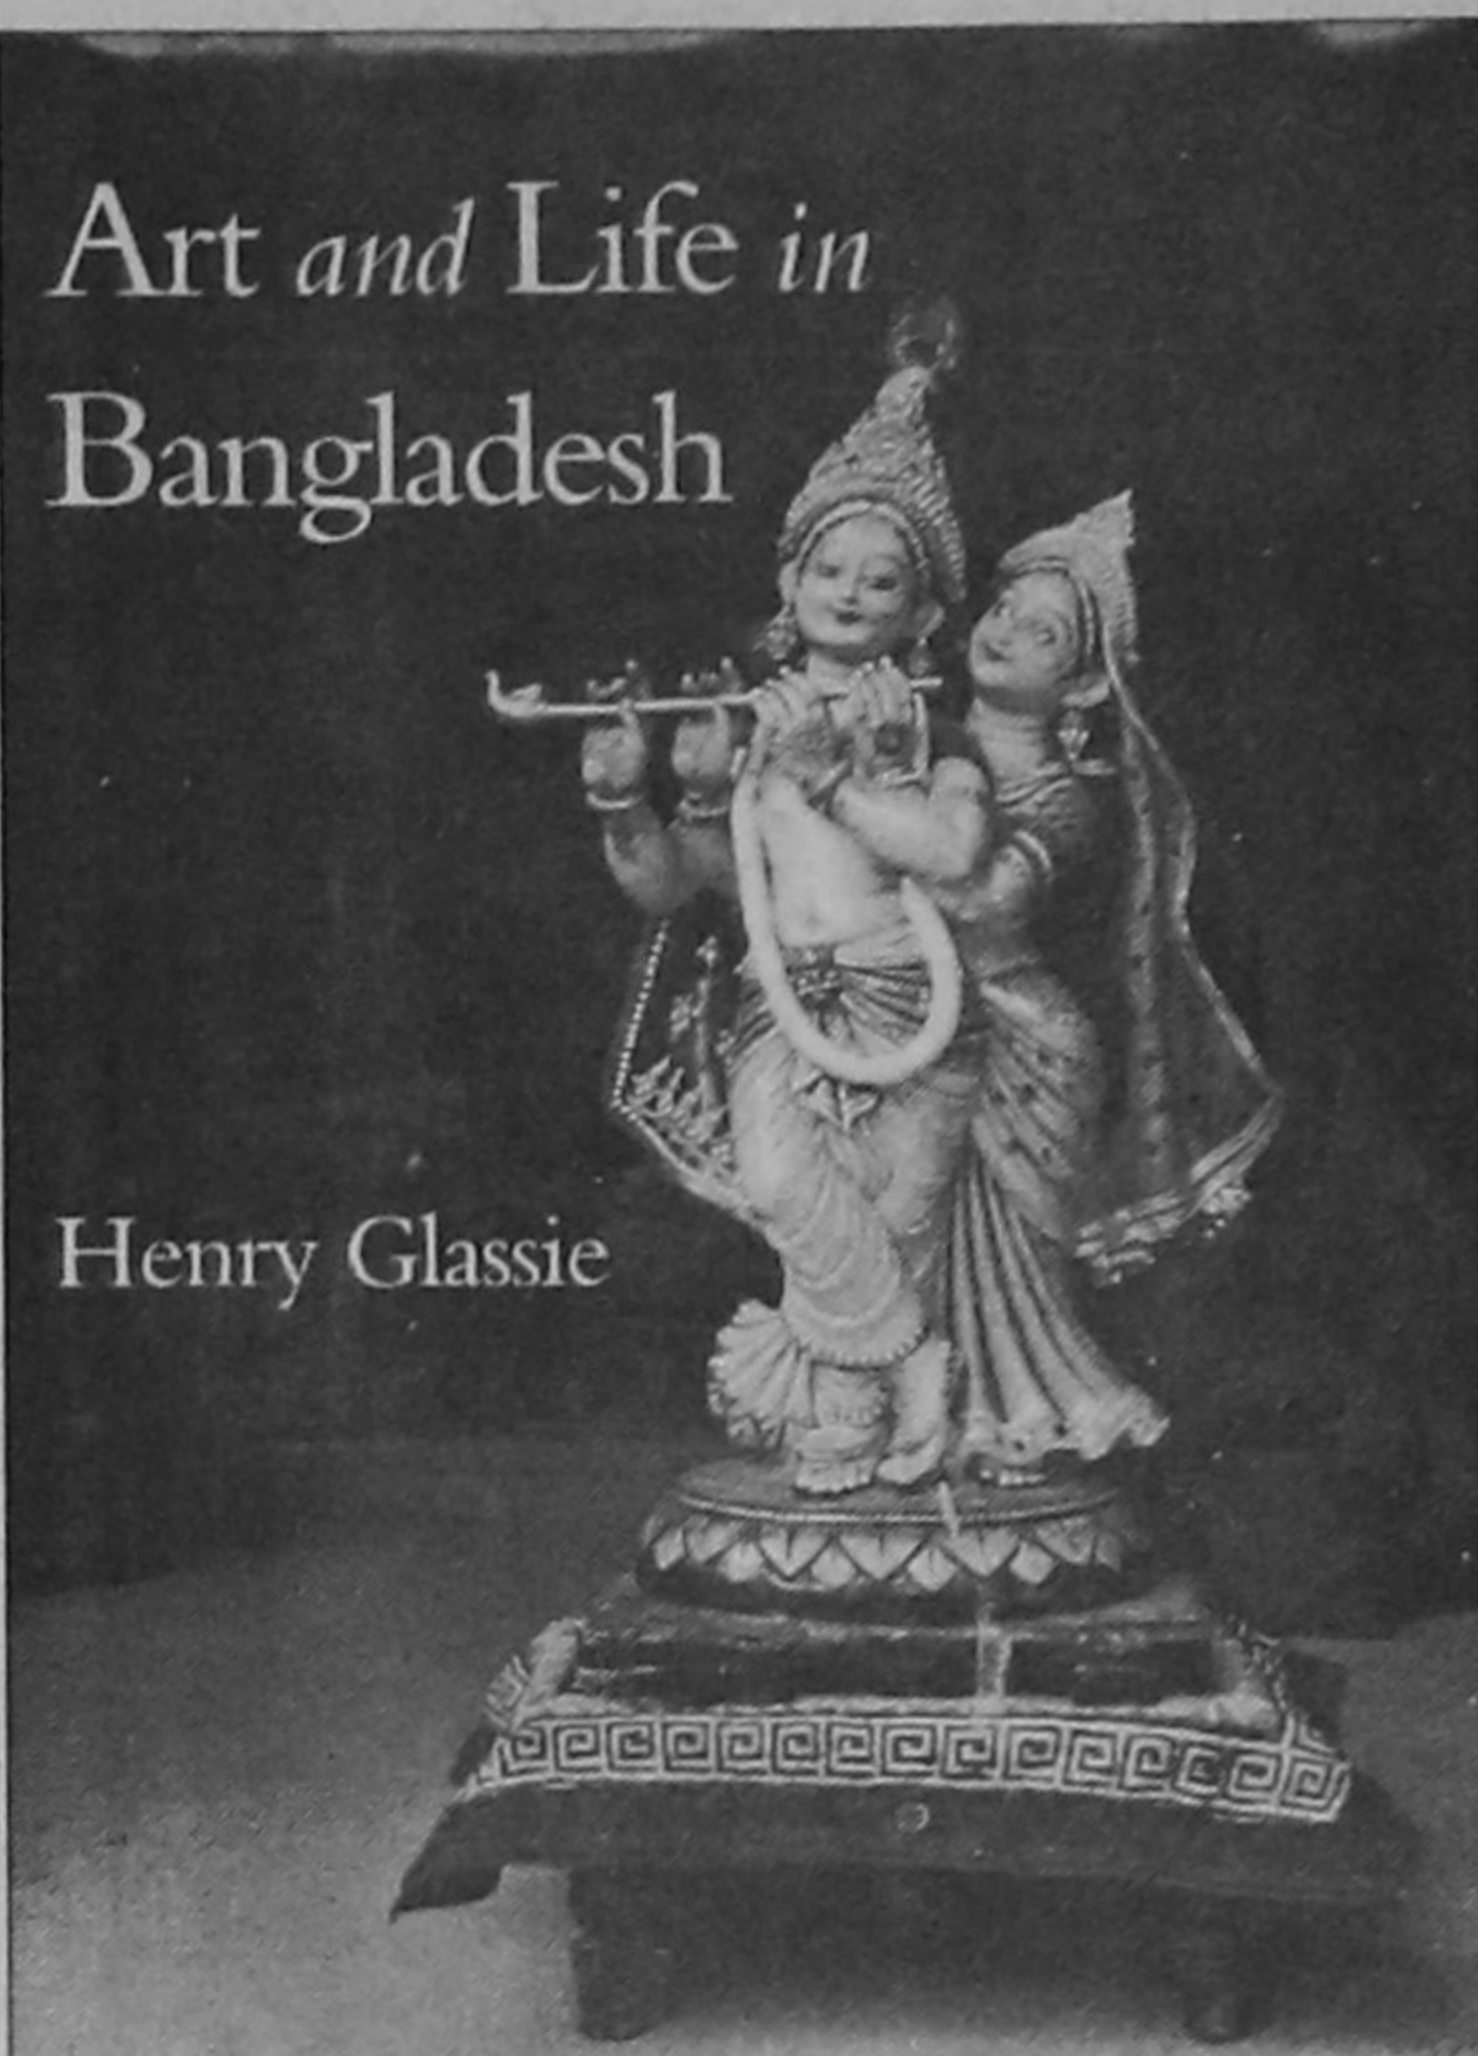

If the artists do their own trades they get a good bargain the problems arises when the middlemen are involved. Sometimes the NGOs play the part of the middlemen. These middlemen crush the artists. If a Jamdani is sold for Taka 3000, then the weaver gets about 1000 Taka for it. But there are instances, where a Nakshikata was sold buy an NGO for 300 dollars and the maker only received 25 dollars for it. These example shows, capitalism works well than NGOs.

Dr. Glassie recorded two kinds of changes brought up by capitalism, one that encourages the artists and one that destroys the art and the artists for money.

Another aspect of the modern art is its absence of God; the reality of life takes the upper hand to the spiritual expression. In this regard the Professor said, "The most rich, profound and dedicated art is the religious art, be it Hindu or Muslim". Dr. Glassie ended his discussion remembering Babu Lal of Shimulia and Paru Begum of Feni. He took a hectic journey to Shimulia to see Babu Lal and his sculpted figure of 'Radha and Krishna'. To the Professor, "This artistic piece has made the world bigger and better". He went to see Paru Begum who makes prayer mats, "The simple geometric patterns, the enclosing squares made the prayer mat a wonderful piece of art and all my trips and my 13 years of hard work in Bangladesh was worth while because of these two brilliant pieces of art".

Dr. Henry Glassie is a professor of Folklore and Co-ordinator or Turkish Studies at Indiana University, USA. He has been a Guggenheim Fellow and a fellow of the National Humanities Institute; he has also served as President of the vernacular Architecture Forum and of the American Folklore Society.

Glassie has received many awards for his work, including the Chicago Folklore prize and the Award for Superior Service from the Ministry of Culture of the Turkish Republic.

Three of his books have been named among the notable books of the year by the New York Times. His books include;

'Pattern in the Material Folk Culture of Eastern United States', 'Folk Housing in Middle Virginia', 'All Silver and No Brass', 'Passing the Time in Ballymenone', 'Irish Folktales', 'The Spirit of Folk Art', 'Turkish Traditional Art Today' and 'Art and Life in Bangladesh'.
