Sprint aces on collision course

July 23 (AP): The celebrated, trashtalking showdown between Michael Johnson and Maurice Greene will come sooner than expected in the 200 metres in the U.S. Olympic trials. After the two won their opening-round heats Saturday. they were drawn into the same heat alongside each other for Sunday's semifinals. Off the track, their confrontation was a draw. Johnson, the world recordholder and Olympic gold medalist, won his opening-round heat at 19.89 seconds, the secondfastest in the world this year, behind only his 19.71, despite experiencing a slight cramp. Greene, the 200 world champion, had to struggle to win his heat at 20.29.

The two combatants exchanged stares in the warmup area before entering Sacramento State's Hornet Stadium, but no words were uttered. While neither would discuss that meeting after their races, sprinter Brian Lewis did. "Michael was walking by Maurice and Maurice stared at him and Michael stared back,' Lewis said. "They laughed at each other. They were doing it for pride, I guess.

"It was entertaining." While the two have been badmouthing each other since the trials began last weekend, only Johnson had something to say after the first round. Greene said he would not comment until after Sunday's final.

Johnson, however, did not talk much about the heated rivalry that has turned into real bitterness, except to say that "it's silly." He did discuss his race and the small problem he had with his right quadriceps.

He said he felt a cramp in the quad coming around the curve. "but it went away down the straightaway."

"I think it will be OK," Johnson said. "This has happened before, but it did go away.

"I was able to keep on running today. I was able to finish the race and that was encouraging. I hope it's nothing, but we'll have to see. There's no way of knowing right now.

"Tomorrow I hope the schedule won't be a problem, but I

Johnson's coach, Clyde Hart said Johnson would test the injured leg before Sunday's semifinals, and that the sprinter would not race if there is a problem. Hart said there was no sense in jeopardising a possible two gold medals (in the 400 and 1,600 relay) for three.

The semifinal and final will be run about 1 hour, 45 minutes apart. To protect and ease the pain. Johnson was treated with a

The first-round heats probably enforced the Nevada odds that favoured Johnson in this rare track and field event that has attracted national betting.

The two have met twice, with each winning once, Johnson in 1997 and Greene in 1998, both times at the Prefontaine Classic in Eugene, Ore. They were heading for another showdown at the USA Championships at Eugene last year, but Johnson withdrew at the last minute because of injury

That's when the trash-talking truly began. Greene said Johnson was ducking him, Johnson claimed he was legitimately hurt.

Shahbaz, Tahir in town

Pakistan hockey legend Shahbaz Ahmed and his compatriot Tahir Zaman arrived in the capital yesterday to play in the Premier Division hockey league for Mohammedan Sporting Club, bidding for their fourth successive league championship.

Shahbaz was instrumental in 1994-95 and 1998 while Tahir inspired the team in 1996-97 and 1998.

Both Faisalabad-based players had light warm-ups at the Maulana Bhasani Stadium in the afternoon and looked pretty fit. They will don the black and white jersey for the game against Bangladesh Sporting Club on Wednesday.

Talking to reporters, Shahbaz, once regarded the "Maradona of hockey," said he would try his best to help Mohammedan win the league for the fourth consecutive season.

He also informed that he played professional hockey for Orange and Black in Eindhoven, Holland, till last April and enjoyed a two and a half month break before coming here which he considered as his second home.

"Hopefully I will take part in the whole season," said the bespectacled hockey magician. Tahir, for whom this will be his fourth appearance for Mohammedan, also looked pretty confident.

The pair will join compatriot Maksud Ahmed, who arrived last week

McEnroe could only shake his head, a sour expression on his face, when asked if the team had heard at all from Pete Sampras and Andre Agassi. who claimed they were too hurt to play and left their teammates stranded. Did Sampras or Agassi call or send even a message of support?

"Nope," McEnroe said, the word barely audible and the response summing up the American experience in Spain.

Alex Corretja and Juan Balcells clinched the best-of-five semifinal series Saturday with a 7-6 (6), 2-6, 6-3, 6-7 (5), 6-3 doubles victory over Todd Martin and Chris Woodruff that rendered Sunday's singles matches meaningless. Spain, a Davis Cup finalist

On a cooler, cloudier day than Friday' thick heat at this seaside resort near Bilbao, Corretja and Balcells saved four set points in the opener before taking the set on their first opportunity in the tiebreaker when Balcells put away a volley.

"The first set was ours," McEnroe said. "There's no way in the world we should have lost that set. Instead of being two sets up, it's a set all and they're in the thick of things.

Woodruff said he played with a "little too much fear in the first set," but it was doubtful the Americans would have won this one even if McEnroe had played in his place. Spain appeared on its way to winning in four sets, but the Americans refused to quit, pushed it to a tiebreaker and won that when Woodruff nailed a volley at set point.

After an exchange of breaks to 3-3 in the fifth set, Spain won the final 10 points to close the match. The last three points came on crushing volley winners by Balcells, disparaged memorably by McEnroe before the series began with the comment, "Who the hell is Balcells?"

McEnroe found out -- "He's strong as an ox," he said -- but couldn't resist a left-handed compliment: "He's got the greatest 83 mph serve in the history

It was a 4-hour, 2-minute match filled with exquisite rallies, rapid-fire exchanges at the net, deft drops and crafty lobs, and in the end the Spanish players showed both better skill and greater endurance on the red clay they love.

Corretja particularly stood out in this match, on one point in the fifth set retrieving three overhead smashes. "Chris hit a couple (overheads) early in the point (and) I was over there saying. 'Chris, don't hit it to Corretja. don't hit it to Corretja." Martin said. "Then I got one -- I think it was the easiest one of the point -- and I hit it to Corretja. "He won so many key, key points with his athleticism or his hustle or just his defensive None of the Spanish players was alive the last time Spain got this far, and it didn't matter to any of them that this triumph came against an American team depleted by injuries. "We love to win, and we don't look at the opponent." Corretja said after beating Jan-Michael Gambill in singles on Friday. "I don't know if Sampras or Agassi would play better than Gambill today. "The important thing is to go on the court and to (beat) the guy in front of you. And if it was Gambill, it was Gambill. If it were my father, I would be happy as well.

McEnroe admitted that the US faced an uphill battle without top players Andre Agassi and Pete Sampras, and against a determined home side on their favoured red clay gunning for their first title in the competition's 100-yearhistory. But after losing Saturday's doubles, which the US had been counting on winning, McEnroe said: "I think today is a perfect example of why Davis Cup is a great competition. I mean all the people are really into it. much more into it than other events, except the Majors. So it's exciting to be part of that." And McEnroe, who had considered coming out of retirement to aid his flagging side, added: "Obviously playing is the most exciting. But just to be part of it in any way I think is nice. It's draining you know, in a sense. But it's certainly a great thing.'
