ADB to provide $ 30m for development in CHT be provided to improve the income generating capacity of the poor.

The project is the first major donor-sponsored effort to help the hill people since the signing of the landmark 1997 peace agreement with tribal 'Shanti Bahini' rebels.

The ADB loan will finance half the project cost of US 60.3 million dollars. The loan is from the ADB's Asian Development Fund and is repayable in 32 years with an eight-year grace period.

The credit carries one per cent interest per annum during the grace period and 1.5 per cent per annum thereafter. Co-financing will come from the Danish International Development Agency, the Palli Karma Sahayak Foundation, the government and beneficiaries.

Negotiations for the loan were earlier held in September between the government of Bangladesh and ADB.

According to a donor report, the CHT region is much poorer than the rest of the country. Per capita income is 40 per cent lower than the national average. The literacy rate is also lower due to the limited income of parents, poor access to schools, shortage of teachers and the fact that children are kept at home for household and income-generating activities.

The project aims to underpin the 1997 peace accord by empowering local communities to decide what they want and to take part in projects. A community investment fund will be created to finance small scale development activities.

In addition, the project will strengthen the capacity of local government institutions, non-governmental organisations (NGOs), and beneficiaries to plan and implement local activities.

This will provide a sound institutional capacity for further initiatives. The project will encourage women to be more involved in decision-making and enterprise development.

"We'll be tackling the main problems of poor communication, overdependence on subsistence agriculture, underemployment due to the underdevelopment of the crafts sector, low savings, and poor access to credit and savings facilities," says ADB's Donnith Walton, who is working on the project.

The Ministry of Chittagong Hill Tracts Affairs will be the executing agency for the project, which is due to be completed in 2008.
