Tale of a Father's Predicament

Arthur Miller's portrayal of crisis of a war-stricken family in his All My Sons deeply moved the city's theatre-goers at its premiere at the Mahila Samity Auditorium

By Tawfique Ali

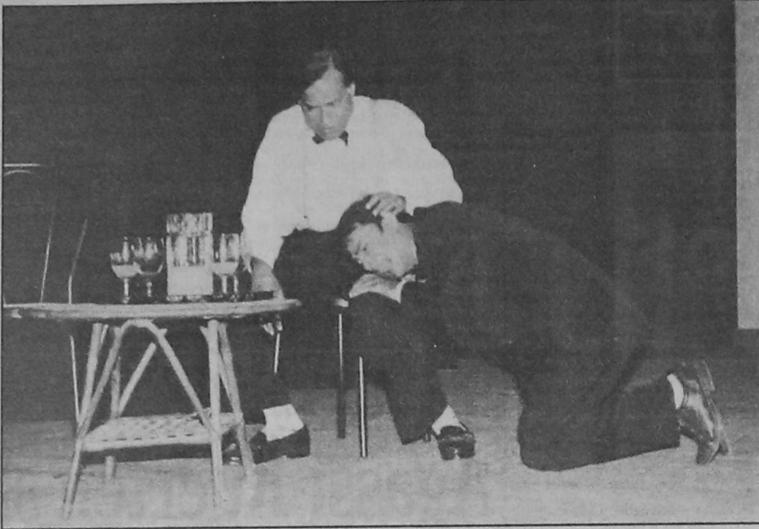

THEATRE depicts innermost crisis of human mind in a striking vividness and tells the stories that lie untold in human hearts; talks of dilemmas that one hardly can communicate to others. Theatre talks of life and its intricate obscurity. This is the hidden force to which the theatre lovers are drawn by.

Arthur Miller's celebrated classic All My Sons was premiered consecutively on November 23 and 24 at the Mahila Samity Auditorium at Bialy Road. The play has been translated into Bangla and directed by Jamaluddin Hossain—a prolific theatre personality in the country's group theatre movement.

This was an enterprising production of Nagorik Natyangan Ansambol, one of the pioneering theatre groups of the country. This theatre group enjoys a tremendous success earned in the past through a number of smashing productions.

The first premiere of Nagorik Natyangan Ansambol's latest production on Nov. 23 was attended by celebrated theatre personalities and dignitaries.

The fantastic production of All

Jamaluddin Hossain (in white shirt) and Sharif Shaikat in a dramatic moment of the play, All My Sons.

All My Sons calls for hearty appreciation and public acclamation.

The play is set in post-war American society. In the play the past events and actions blend with those of the present. Indeed, past actions determine the present realities. As in other major works, Miller in this play too, has critically dealt upon the theme of consumerism in the post-war American society. The question of morality and value are brought into the focus in the play.

Jamaluddin Hossain's powerful performance in the role of the central character Joe Keller was moving.

Though the events and characters of the play are purely American, their inter-relationship, sorrows and happiness and values are so human that they don't appear unfamiliar to us in a different social context and time. Rather, the erosion of moral values, greed and selfishness, that are the central themes of the play, seem quite relevant in our time of moral and ethical degeneration.

All My Sons, it is expected, would drive us all into a soul-searching brooding.

The matter of making business at the time of war has developed as a plot of the story. But Miller has projected morality in a broader perspective. That is, as a social being man is obliged to his society. However deceptive he might be, he can't evade the consequences of his deeds in the long run due to an inseparable bondage with the society. As seen in the play, moral obligations haunt Keller family till the last.

The son accuses his father of committing immoral acts. As a result the family gets disoriented. The father embraces a tragic end of life as a last resort to his bewilderment. A family remains left in the ruins of disaster.

During the twenties and the thirties, Miller began to think over false values of worldly success. He could have perceived the crisis and disaster caused by financial constraints in the lives of his parents and many others with his keen analytical eyes.

Miller was termed an Ibsenian when this play was staged in Broadway. Like many plays of Ibsen, many significant events of the play occur in flash back too.

A pleasant moment of the play.

1971 Documents on Crimes against Humanity

Liberation War Museum's unique effort to keep our collective memories of Liberation War alive

By Audity Falguni

LIBERATION War Museum inaugurated its month-long exhibition titled "Gaurabmay Attyadan Chirajagaruk (the supreme sacrifice of the martyrs will always be remembered)" as well as the launching ceremony of its first publication "Ekattar Ganahattar Daili" (Documents on Crimes against Humanity Committed by Pakistan Army and their agents in Bangladesh during 1971) on last Friday.

The mass killing carried out by the Pakistan army in Bangladesh in 1971 happens to be one of the most heinous crimes of the twentieth century. The mass killing in Kampecha carried out by the Palpat regime within the next four years might come close to the crimes committed against humanity in Bangladesh in terms of pervasiveness. But the unfortunate aspect of the Bangladesh massacre is the atrocious carnage which took place on the eastern region of the subcontinent did not raise adequate concern world-wide. The documents published within the covers of the Daili, it is hoped will inform people the world over about the dark chapter of contemporary history and sensitize people about the violation of humanity.

With black jacket, the book is a bilingual edition. The contents of the title feature Hamoodur Rahman Commission Report on PAK Army activities in Bangladesh during 1971, UN Declaration of Human Rights, a partial transcript of the tape recording of some conversation between some of the Pakistan Army units operating in Dhaka on the night of March 25/26 1971. Sheikh Hasina's speech about the crime bodies at Jalladkhana Killing ground after killing them. Soon after the independence, oneday I saw thick layer of human fat on water of safety tank at Jalladkhana. I went there to play with my friends. We assumed that the entire safety tank was filled with dead bodies."

oral history of one Md. Abdul Zabbar from Mirpur-11 is recorded and included in the book.

A number of other similar oral histories that are recorded and included in the volume, makes it a valuable reference work.

Readers will, however, benefit most from the Hamoodur Rahman Report added in the book as supplementary. Although the commission was established "to determine the nature of the situation which led to the surrender by the chief of the Eastern Command and the soldiers under his supervision," provide indirect reference to the genocide committed by the Pakistani occupation army and shed new light to killing of the intellectual community as well as the mass killing in Bangladesh.

Liberation War Museum is entitled to special thanks for such a precious publication.

TV GUIDE

PICK OF THE DAY

Lost in Space

Tonight on HBO at 10

No, it is nothing like the original 60's TV series. In fact, other than the familiar plot of the Robinson family set adrift in space looking for home, this movie is light years away. Even Robby the robot is new and updated. This is largely thanks to more than 750 state-of-the-art special effects that catapult it to being a visual feast, creating larger than life creatures and out-of-this-world scenarios.

An all-star ensemble cast also makes this movie a veritable eye candy. Matt Le Blanc from television's Friends plays the pilot of a mother ship, headed towards a new planet marked for colonisation. En route, the ship is sabotaged by arch villain Dr Zachary Smith and is sent hurtling off course. The Robinson family then has to figure out a way to survive in uncharted territories and unexpected circumstances. A definite must see for sci-fi fans. Other cast members add the glitter, such as Oscar winner William Hurt, Mimi Rogers, Lacey Chabert, and Heather Graham among others. Check out the groovy retro-inspired closing sequence. Starring: William Hurt, Gary Oldman, Matt Le Blanc
