Festivity in Simplicity

Leading fashion designer Shahrak Shahid opens his own boutique

By Fayza Haq

SHARUK Shahid has recently opened a permanent gallery at Dhanmondi Rd 27 for the display of the clothes he designs. This new venue is partially to raise funds for acid victims every month. He says, "Anyone could be an acid victim. We should have the awareness that an acid victim is not a diseased person. It is the acid thrower who is sick. This is a protest against the evil doers. As an artist I have some commitments to my society and this is my way of fulfilling it. Models like Tarin have not taken money for their photo session, donating the proceeds to the acid victims instead. They will also be spending time with these hapless victims."

Shahrak's 'Henry's Heritage' will also provide training in sewing and embroidery to these victims so that they can be employed by different boutiques in city. In other places not enough room was given to exhibit the clothes properly. After the Eid collection, we will have shows of different collection each month in new patterns and colours with the designer deciding the colours and motifs as they do abroad. Designers from other boutiques will be invited to talk about fashion in the gallery premises."

Asked what was new about his latest collection, Shahrak says, "I go in for simplicity. There is no festive mood but there is no extravagance as seen in my earlier work. Take the blue sari, which has intricate 'zardusi' work on the border and 'anchal'. There is 'hazarbuti' all over. There is excess of decoration. The black georgette with the block print and embroidery is also sober."

Speaking about the problems that he faces in his work, Shahrak says, "Whatever funds I have invested are that of my own and this is not enough. I help from government and other financial institutions to go in a bigger way. They can sponsor the shows and so create new dimensions for the fashion world. It is difficult to do this individually. The weavers don't get loans from the banks and so cannot provide us with diverse items. I can pay for my saris but for mass production outside help has to be obtained. The embroidery work does follow the patterns that we give but this has taken since '92. I have 350 to work for me off and on, who are paid piece wise and our regular employees on our pay-roll are limited to 20. Now we have institute for designers but there are none for those who do the weaving, cut, sew and embroidery."

Asked if he has not abandon his profession as a painter who has qualified from Delhi, Shahrak says, "I am still painting and the saris are my canvas. I have to make a living. When I began in '92 I did not feel in any way that I was abandoning my profession."

Shahrak's new collection has a black georgette 'sari' with silver and gold leaf patterns, with paisley pattern on the 'anchal' in gold, silver and blue, with dots on the body. The work is in brown, beige and mostly in gray and black. Another eye-catching creation is a beige and gold sari with geometrical patterns. The highlight work is done in silver and black forming paisley patterns and flowers (the motifs intertwining each other. The body has embroidery in geometrical shapes in black and gray bringing in more sophistication.

Another has machine embroidery all over in black and gold with massive flowers in gold. Half the 'sari' is painted over while the other part has block print on it. It is peacock blue and in the 'anchal' are leaves and flowers in which the orange and green paint have been laid on heavily to give it a 3-D effect. It has self print in geometrical shapes in black and purple surrounded by 'alpina' motifs in turquoise, gray and purple. Its 'anchal' is gorgeous with beige, blue and gray motifs. Yet another 'sari' is half in spray paint with red, green and yellow flowers and leaves. At the side are leaves in a horizontal form with embroidery in geometrical shapes. Equally attractive is a black 'sari' with 'alpina' designs on the border done in orange, silver and gold containing patterns of starburst, paisley and flowers. This is complete with a border of orange and gray geometrical patterns with interspersed leaves.

The collection also contains 'punjabis' and 'kameezes' with delightful patterns and colours. There is 'punjabi' with 'sherwani' cut and cloth-covered buttons marching along the side in a partially diagonal manner. In the collar, shoulder and front are printed fabrics with squares, rectangles and oblong shapes in green and orange. Another 'punjabi' is in pale gray with block prints all over it. The back, shoulders and front have heavier motifs in green, brown and beige. Basically it has intertwining block motifs all over it. A white one has embroidery in brown and beige in squares, circles and dots on the shoulder, round neck and the front. This is simple but attractive and good for daily use.

One of the 'kameezes' is of Tangail muslin and has large embroidery in it presenting flowers growing in diagonal manner. The colours are pale peach, biscuit, emerald and mint. Another ladies' wear includes an applique, tie-dye and block work all combined into one. It has floral motifs in pink, gray, beige and pistachio colours. There is mirror work on the short sleeves and round neck. Another attractive inclusion is a georgette 'kameez' is pink, touched with white and yellow. Its neck is embroidered in front, the sleeves and front in purple, white, gray in the form of flowers combined with admirable geometrical patterns. A black 'kameez' that is included in the collection has embroidery in 'zardosi', bringing in orange, red and gold at the neck.

In this Shahrak has ambitiously taken up a project with high hopes. After his eight years of dedication to the field of festive apparel, one hopes that he will proceed and progress with success.
