exhibition Colouring a Different Canvas

Sumon Bapary's his first solo at L'Alliance Francaise de Dhaka

By Tawfique Ali

AINTING these days has gained newer dimensions. With various experiments by the artists it is in a process of transformation. Artists are too tireless in their effort to give their works a different characteristic. Such efforts speak about the novelty in their minds. Bangalees have traditionally inherited a different artistic trend. Their pottery, wood-work and metal work can easily be treated as artworks. This bears a testimony to the fact of what they are. Making pots and panting on them is an ancient tradition in Bangalee culture. Contemporary young artists are remarkably exerting their artistic creed to once again portray the country's traditional past with a new appeal. The solo exhibition of pottery painting by haven found powerful expression Sumon Bapary, a budding painter, hosted by Alliance Francaise is not an exception to that. This show, opened on January 15, is another step to retain Bangladeshi cultural tradition.

Rabindranath Tagore, Kazi Nazrul Islam and a pioneering Bangladeshi photographer Monjur Alam Beg are the remark-The works on display are porable examples of texture. Another traits, landscapes and women portrayal of a singing bowl against figures in pastoral setting, floral pastoral backdrop represents and abstract alpona. Bangladesh's rural landscape of this country. Women faces occupy many of natural beauty painted on the pots Sumon's works. These faces speak of different shapes and sizes easily entice the viewers. The works have been made eloquent by the some other innermost feelings deliberate use of colours signifying the artist's feelings, his ideas and objectives. But could painting on pots be a problem for an artist? "The texture of the pot itself has given me a challenge to paint on it and I find that the shape of the pot can give a different dimension to my paintings," said Sumon. A number of realistic portraits in Sumon's works. Portraval of ity in this part of portrayal. Sheikh Mujibur Rahman, Though deformity is frequent and prominent in Sumon's works, realistic implication has also been suggested. One of the paintings shows a woman figure against the backdrop of a meadow, standing under a tree. She is clad in leaves, virtually suggesting woman and nature merged into one. It is further hinted that the woman likes to be identical with the of their sorrows and happiness, nature. This in fact implicates that women and nature are comwith adequate purity and simplicplementary to each other. She appears to be emotionally attached to nature. She stretches her look to the far end of the horizon, may be awaiting her loved one to come back to her. This woman's emotion and mind's texture are reflected against big canvas called 'nature' that simultaneously echoes emotional intricacy and mental state of a youthful woman. Nature and women share each other emotionally in this piece of work. In another piece, a woman is seen sitting under a tree letting her legs wet in water of a running brook by the distant hills. The usual shape of the tree has been broken into different forms, may be to give expressions to different states of the woman's mind. Another notable work in the show projects distracted human thoughts. Distraction has been suggested by the use of different colours and shade. Stormy condition of thoughts settle down at one stage and comes to a confluence that assumes red colour suggesting a radiant resolution.

Sumon Bapary, a second-year student, currently enrolled in BAF Govt Art College, Chittagong, took part in a duet pottery exhibition held at Alliance Francaise in 2000.

All his earthen works paintings on display are for sale. Prices of
