Noazesh Ahmed captures the Tagore's world depicted in his letters to his niece

FAYZA HAQ

DR Noazesh Ahmed, sitting at Alliance Francaise, where he presented his slides on Tagore's letters to his niece, says, "I began my photography in my early schooldays i.e. when I was a student of class VII. At that time I belonged to the 'Mukul Fauj' with Quamrul Hasan who was our C in C, and I did a lot of photography for that that institution. Later I progressed to more creative photography in '48 when I was preparing for Metric. That year one of my photographs were included in the Commonwealth exhibition at London. This gave me more impetus. Meanwhile, my elder brother Naibuddin Ahmed and Amanul Huq encouraged me further. My photographs were used for the cover of 'Eelan', a magazine of Radio Pakistan. At the agricultural college where I studied, there were many idyllic scenes here and there so that I had many subjects of nature.

Asked to talk about his rise to fame and his books on photography, Dr Ahmed says, "Before going to USA, in 1953, as a student of agricultural college there was an exhibition of Naibuddin Ahmed, Amanul Huq and my photographs and one of the education officer being impressed by my work, I got the Fullbright scholarship for agronomy. The pictures helped me. When in USA, at the Oklahoma State University and later at the Wisconsin Medicine campus there was an exhibition called 'The Portrait of America' organized by the Museum of Modern Art, Life and Time magazines. They invited a few foreign photographers for their contribution of how they look at American life. This was in '57 when I was doing my doctorate thesis on genetics.

"I sent three photographers to the sponsors and the one on Lake Mandota was selected and exhibited along with top photographers like Ansell Adams, Ernest Hass, Gordon Parks and Elphinstone Eliot. The top American photographers were at that time attached to 'Life' magazine. I overnight became a student hero of 25 years who shook hands with President Eisenhower at the Rose Garden. Later I became a member of the American Society of Photography and after that I had many exhibitions in N.America with 'Camera Concept, USA'. From that time I was abstract and surrealistic. I made a series of photography called 'The World of TSEliot' and on the American poets like Walt Whitman.

"Pakistan Times" Sunday magazine used my pictures for their cover pages with time. During the War of Liberation, I resigned my post as the Secretary of Pakistan Tea Board, and joined the Liberation Movement in USA and London promoting the cause for Bangladesh. I took many photographs based on the Freedom Movement, including those of Sheikh Mujib. Most of the Americans asked us 'What is Bangladesh? how do you differ from Pakistanis and Indians?'

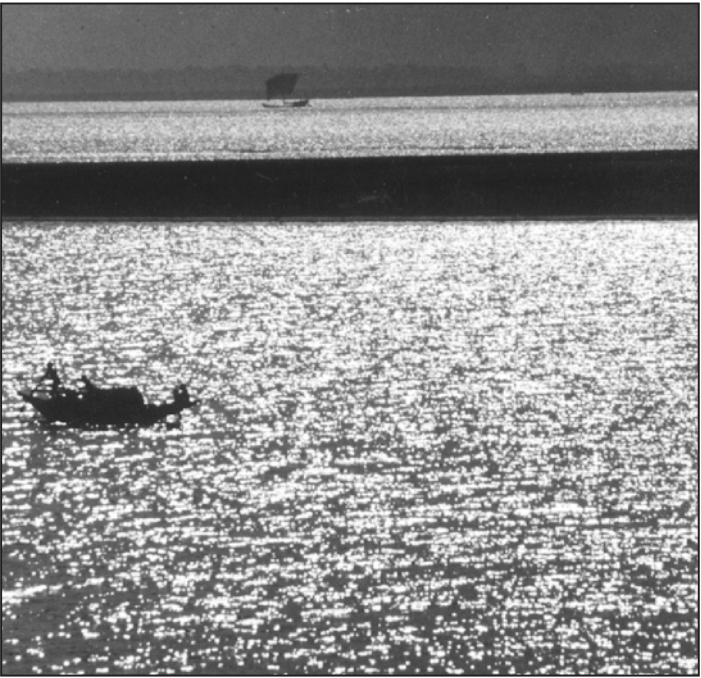

We had no books or photographs and I had only 50 to 60 slides with me to show. At that time I was working for the World Bank, Washington DC and I decided to come home and make a book on Bangladesh. I then made the book 'Bangladesh' which published in 1975 but the killing of Mujib stopped the publication. It came out finally at the end of 1975 and it was the first book on Bangladesh, not only for photography but any other matter on that theme. After that I brought out another book, 'The Portrait of Bangladesh', and 'Wild Flowers of Bangladesh'. I also held the exhibition 'Quest for Bangladesh' at the Shilpakala Academy. Next I felt that I should do something cinematic on 'Rabindranath Tagore's Letters from the River Padma'.

"These letters are written to his niece, Indira Devi, that stretched from 1887 to 1897 and comprised 252 pieces. I could not present all the letters but thematically treated his works. At that time Tagore was not as famous as he was later and still today. He was about 28 to 30 years old at that time.

I selected a few and took only excerpts from them, part by part. This slide show is known as 'Chhinnno Patra' although Tagore wrote them very systematically. It is not easy to write so many letters to a single person in course of that time. These are one of the finest pieces of Tagore's prose and they are lyrical. He himself sometimes said that perhaps his best work is 'Chhinnno Patra'.

"His main theme is nature,

The river Padma.

ordinary people and the vastness of the River Padma. Before his death, Goethe had said, 'I want light, more light. Tagore too had said, 'If someone asks me, before my death as to what I want, I too will say, space and more space'. The vastness of Padma influenced Tagore's vision of vastness. My slides try to capture this feeling of immensity of nature. Tagore also observed the common people's life while he was on his boat journeys. This included the gypsies, bathers on the river bank. He observed them and the peculiarities of East Bengal at that time. I tried to catch the images of natural beauty from the letters. "In between, to break the monotony I also included excerpts of Tagore's short stories, as Tagore wrote several very important ones during that time, which are mentioned in the letters. This includes 'Khoka Babur Prottabartan' where the violent Padma River swept away a child. The river can be very gentle and sometimes quite violent. Another famous story, which has been treated by Satyajit Rai too, 'The Postmaster' has been mentioned in three letters. I present the orphan girl Rattan's tragedy. I present this through minimal art with only ten frames telling the entire story including 'Meghorodra', the third story that I've incorporated of which Giralbala is the heroine of this story. At the end a few songs have also been put in. These include pieces like 'Aye annanda joggey amar nimontran' and made the programme and hour long."

Speaking about the secret of good photography, Dr Ahmed says, "This is just like painting and you must have the vision, feel the sensations around you, have the sense of space and feeling for colour. You must know how to handle the camera well, in fact, have a mastery over the skill. George Bernard Shaw, incidentally, never wanted to be Shakespeare but Michaelangelo. He began painting but as it didn't suit him, he moved to the camera box but as he was a failure there too so he commented, 'A photographer is like a codfish, laying millions of eggs of which only one hatches.'

Asked if he preferred colour to black and white photography, Dr Ahmed says, "

I began with black and white but as I'm a naturalist colour is what I favour. You may say that black and white films are dramatic but I'm not after a dramatic effect. The mono colour doesn't present the world as it is and doesn't present the full continuity of the frames. Photography is parallel to painting and colour is important in painting too."

Dwelling on his favourite photographers, Dr Ahmed concludes, "I like Ernest Hass who took beautiful impressionistic photos of New York, Gordon Parks who included poetic interpretations of what we see, Cartier Bresson, and Eugene Smith."
