An extravaganza of enigmatic abstractions

Exhibition of senior Bangladeshi painters' works at the Indian High Commission Gallery

FAYZA HAQ

IN order to inaugurate the newly decorated gallery of the Indian High Commission, and to bring greater amity between India and Bangladesh, an exhibition of fourteen senior Bangladeshi artists was recently held with considerable fanfare.

Mohammed Kibria's "Painting Black", an oil done in 1997 had spheres of white, gray, black and blue, one emanating from another and creating a aura of pristine beauty. The dark spheres offset by the gray and pale yellow colours made you think of that the dark gems of rectangles had been washed by a pale light.

Abdur Rezzak's "Nature" brought in vivid splashes of vermilion, yellow, blue, white, green with more brightness in the centre than the rest of the canvas. On the top were vast layers of white and yellow and beige. This reminded you of Jackson Pollock's work. His other oil work "Nature-1" had leaves done in an abstract manner. Swirls of green, vermilion, blue and brown and other colours from his palette were thrown on to the canvas parts of which were left bare at times. Crayon lines held the painting together.

Aminul Islam's "Transformation" in acrylic brought in another abstraction with intriguing texture work in brown, blue, green and orange. At the top was orange with vermilion at the centre, the thick colours being used to offset by white to give a dynamic impact. His "Floating Blacks" was also a fascinating creation with dramatic black shades set off by browns and yellows, reminding you of the aura of a desert.

In Safiuddin Ahmed's "Images of Fishes" in crayon you confronted wonderful images in yellow, outlined with black so that you saw the scale covered bodies of fish from various angles. This was put in a semi-abstract manner and had masses of black and gray in the background to hold up the forms of the majestic fish. This portrayal of the underwater creatures was magnificent indeed.

Qayyum Choudhury's "Oil 2001" had the figure of a woman whose

face was a variation of gray and green, while her sari was yellow. He brought in straw roofs of houses at a the back along with banana trees, and this was a superb delineation of an image "far from the madding crowd." A boat was also included at the back along with geometrical motifs both at the left and right, with grays, greens and blues. His "Dancing Summer" had almost the eyes of human beings cleverly mingled with forms of leaves from nature. These rectangles with a base of pink and shades of gray at the bottom. You saw bright reds encircled with blue or yellow, green or brown. These were oblong, semicircular and rectangular images. This was a pure abstraction although the designs could have been prompted from nature and life around us. Devdas's "Entitled in oil" had suggestions of figures in red, black and gray, all merging into one another. They had a background of blue and black. The faces appeared like masks while the limbs look like that of moving totems, this being a semi-abstract piece. The colours used ranged from subtle orange, gray to black and blue, with a surrounding of more overpowering blue and soft beige. The faces had lines of red and beige while they were outlined with powerful black. The texture work in it was indeed fascinating.

Nitun Kundu's painting was another abstraction where you felt that you could see the sunlight pouring through windows in mind-boggling checkered forms. This was to the left, while there were pillar-like forms to the right. The cascading colours that ran vertically were pulsating and were emerald, ruby, aquamarine and sapphire in tones. This cubist work was left partly white while mauve peeped in the left and pink was discovered with bewildering beige in front. An incredible amount of texture work in gray and blue was found at the top to complete it. One could imagine figures and fragments of buildings in the work. The bright red used in the centre, to outline some of the cubes, and the slashes found to the left were indeed dramatic. The contrast of the blue and red, along with the gray and white that offset the darker hues was imaginative and interesting.

"Image of Festival" by Nitun Kundu had bright buntings in green, white and pink, along with semi-abstract faces of rejoicing people. Rectangles and triangles appeared, along with other geometrical shapes. The variations of the forms at the top, side and forefront were made more dramatic by shades of purple, beige, brown and gray in oil. This gave the impact of unfretted happiness. The amount of pale beige brought at the top and centre heightened the use of buoyant colours. His still life, taken from 1958, was realistic with a cup of wine, oranges, a book and a part of a drapery, and was an interesting glimpse of Nitun Kundu's earlier work. This was in red, yellow, brown and muted beige and was an impressive still life.

Qayyum Choudhury's 'Midsummer' (oil)

Mahmudul Haque's "Dream" had splashes of different shades of blue varying from shades of indigo, midnight blue, navy blue to sky blue. They were mingled with greenish blue with slight touches of pink and bold dabs of white. These had broken segments of rectangles merging into one another and mingling of other forms, streaks, dots and squiggles. The thick dramatic splashes of white with soft hues serving as detail also added to the beauty of the composition. Some of the forms appeared to be falling down while others swept across the canvas.

In Mahmud's "Untitled-21" we had a splash of white in the centre, cream, brown, beige, yellow, surrounded by black also stirred the imagination of the viewer. There were tiny circular spheres on the body of the painting as detail which reminded one of forms taken from nature such as dewdrops or tiny lichen. The burnt sienna at the top and flamingo pink at the bottom provided the necessary contrast. In his "Untitled-22" was another oil in black, white, pink and gray which had black in the centre, touched up with cool white. The variations of pink at the top with the very pale pearly gray at the bottom were admirable.

Hashim Khan's "See Bulgaria," a water-colour, showed soft paints dancing joyously with one form seeping into another, and in between were forms that brought to mind oriental insects with gorgeous forms. At the top and bottom of the nature forms were curling sections of hues which were in orange, black and blue. They appeared like gentle

Rafiqun Nabi's "A Drawing" (acrylic) waves and contained some detailed spotted work. His "Face '71"-15 was a variation of green splashes, encircled with broad, black, energetic and quick strokes. It had texture work with variations of pale jade, lemon. His "Road '71"-18, acrylic, like the rest of his work at the exhibit, had forms and splashes of pink, vermilion and gray, which darker bold streaks both at the back and front, holding up the abstract work. At the back was a blinding splash of vermilion, perhaps representing the blood shed for the Liberation. This was merged with silver, which reminded too of the joy of freedom. The colours had been put with mastery and subtlety.

Monirul Islam had changed from his bright colours of the past, and on his hand-made paper which he had created himself, and soft gray ink, plus shades of brown he had done his "Prisoner of Liberty." This magical mysterious creation had small delicate motifs done in a semi abstract manner with bars of gray going horizontally and a rippling cross covering the paper from top to bottom.

Segments of sunflowers, set off by white and black geometrical forms were found in Samarjit Roy Chowdhury's work "Symphony in Moonlight." This made the oil painting appear like a collage of flowers and parts of nature. This was indeed both soul-stirring and pleasing to the eye.

In "Flood in Dhaka-54", by Syed Jehangir in water colour, we saw houses, boats, bits of floating wood done in soft, muted colours, including gray, pinks, blues and browns. The forms were outlined with white. The water was left gray, pale green and beige in light hues except where the shadows crept in. His "Inner Structure Line," in oil, was a merging of very bright hues in waves, where he had used yellow, purple, green and other shades which brought into mind the paddy fields in summer. On top of the curls that moved to the side was the bright hot sky.

An acrylic drawing by Rafiqun Nabi had the face of a labourer with a red band on his head. He appeared to be resting with this hand poised. Vibrant strokes of brown and orange completed the rest of the body, while you detected a face of a cow at the side. A bar of vermilion at the top added mystery and drama to the portrayal.

The exhibition was a feast indeed of abstract and semi-abstract work which any viewer could enjoy, appreciate and learn from.
