Dhaka's gallery-goers wait to savour Alberola's works

Fayza Haq

NDRE Raynouard, the director of Alliance Francaise, explaining why they were having the solo exhibition of Jean-Michel Alberola, called "Je ne m'appelle pas Pierrot, je m'appelle Ferdinand" at their gallery, says, "Alberola is a painter and printmaker. He belongs to a new generation of artists in France who are both print-makers and artists. To me he is much better known as a print-maker than a painter. The artist was chosen by Association Francaise d'Action Artistique for this particular exhibition

This is an agency that works on behalf of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in France and they have two main activities, one to promote French art abroad and the other one is to organise, with the support of the ministry, of Culture in France large exhibitions presenting the artistic productions of foreign countries. For instance in 1996 they did a series on Ireland, bringing in theatre, music cinema, and visual arts. This is part of a deliberate cultural policy to promote French contemporary artists and although they support all forms of artistic expressions, they put a special emphasis on younger generations of artists to help them get international exposure.

"Alberola is a French painter who was born in Algeria of a Spanish family. They moved to France in 1962. He studied at the Institute of Fine Arts at Marseilles, in the south of France and then he went north to the city of Le Havre. He was acclaimed from his very first exposition in 1981. He had his works based on two classical origins, one is a story from the bible, called "Susan and the old men" and the other one is a tale from the Greek mythology called "Diane-Artemis bathing being caught by surprise by the hunter Acteon." The reference to these two stories means that Alberola places the eye (of the artist-the inspiration-, but also of the visitor-the perception-) at the centre of his artistic creation : the eve is concupiscent and full of sensuous desire, it defies social prohibitions, but eventually it is punished.

"The two themes are the source of his inspiration. For Alberola the central role is the perception of the work i.e. how the visitor sees the work. The aesthetic quality for him lies in the space between the work and me as the onlooker. Something happens in the perception of the work and this is the foundation of his art. "The exhibition is entitled 'My name is not Pierrot, my name is Ferdinand' and this is a famous reply in Jean Luc Goddard's 'Pierrot the madman' which was made in 1965 with Jean Paul

Belmondo playing the lead role. The protagonist is called Ferdinand but everybody in the film calls him Pierrot and the story of the film is the story of Pierrot. At the beginning of the film Jean Luc Goddard has Pierrot- Ferdinand having a bath, smoking a Havana cigar with a felt hat on his head, and he is reading a book by Elie Faure, a famous essayists on aesthetics, called 'The spirit of forms'. The excerpt that he reads focuses on Velasquez and his capacity to paint not things but what is in between things. At the same time Goddard, in order to make his point clear gives us a visual sequence of two persons playing tennis with the camera focusing on the ball being exchanged and on the visual space the movement creates between the two players. If we replace the tennis players with the artist, his work and the spectator we can easily visualize

What Alberola tells us is abstract and symbolic, often esoteric. It is involved with the history of western paintings, African culture, bullfighting, political and economic considerations..... He has his own message but he certainly allows the spectator a full freedom of interpretations.."

Dwelling on the prints, Raynouard says, "France has always had a great tradition in printmaking. Three elements are essential: the support (usually paper) on which the image is printed, the technique used to print the image and the fact that it will be done in more than one copy. Our invitation card is intended to be a reminder of the importance of the paper and the perception of the print will depend largely on the quality of the paper. Among the famous brands of art papers everybody knows the 'papiers d'Arches'. A number of different techniques can be used as from a woodblock, stone, silk, metal or linography. All the works in this exhibition are based on serigraphy with the print being transferred from silk to paper.

In one of the prints is a collection of sheep, all looking alike, (which emphasizes the element of reproduction in the process of printmaking), except for two (which expresses the ever present possibility to exercise one's freedom and at the same time stands there as an element of humour; it also brings some confusion into the mind of the viewer, forcing him to doubt and, consequently, to think for himself).

In another we see train tracks with a tunnel covered with snow. At the end are the words "Une autarcie autoritaire" and speaks of a closed society with no economic connection with the rest of the surroundings. "If you between two walls you are not questioning anyone. What you enter is a tunnel of darkness which could lead to dictatorship," Raynouard comments.

In a third piece we see a partly covered face and the accompanying commentary speaks of concepts of sand grains. This is followed by one of the buildings of the fifties in France when accommodations had to be provided to a large number of people coming from the countryside to live in the cities. "The French built such blocks of housings which became one of the causes of social problems. In the right is the graffiti drawn on a photo and it present people hanging on to straps while travelling by bus or in the subway so as not to fall. You can only see the silhouettes of the people. The people don't appear to have individuality." This is followed by a man sitting down saying "My name is not Pierro, my name is Ferdinand." Another print says "He speaks, I paint" and one sees the lower part of a carnival tent. Another brings in Aix en Provence which is the city where Cezanne lived and painted, and with his imagination he brings in touches of the Cheyenne country into the same print, with prints of claws of eagles on the mountains of St Victoire. Another mind-boggling print brings in half the body of Marianne, the symbol of French Revolution, along with a bayonet. The print also brings in a portrait that reminds one of the portrait that reminds one of Tortsky or Lenin and is called

"Cain and Able" The exhibition would no doubt stir the imagination of the viewers and give students of print making in the city a lot to learn from.
