LIRE en Fete or Reading Festival is a yearly event hosted by Alliance Francaise all over the world and sponsored by the cultural affairs Ministry of France. Alliance Francaise in Bangladesh dedicates the Lire en Fete-2001 edition to ambidexter French author Jacques Prevert," says Christophe Steyer, Deputy Director of Alliance Francaise de Dhaka.

When asked why they decided to focus on Prevert, Chris-tophe's reply was, "Prevert was very near to the people. He spoke for the masses. His effort was to break a barrier between so called intelligentsia and the mass people. Another notable point in this regard is that Prevert was a frequenter in different fields of art like literature, fine art, film making and script writing."

The sole objective of Lire en Fete is to draw commoners' attention to the significance and necessity of having an access to reading. To inspire people to have an acquaintance with books more and more; to open libraries and promote reading habit of the general people is the thematic objective of the Reading Festival.

Jacques Prevert was a multi faceted talent; a communist and a member of the October group.

The Prevert show featured poster exhibition which presented his eventful life and different aspects of his work. The exhibits of the show focused Prevert as a poet, a graphic artist and a dialogue writer. Screening of three movies for which he wrote the dialogue and script is also part of the highlight of the festival. The exhibition has offered the viewers a menu of Prevert's literary work, some memorable moments with Janine Prevert and Pablo Picasso, posters of his movies, his collage art work and self-portrait.

An exponent of surrealist movement in poetry. Prevert had a concern for contemporary life and politics reflected both in his literary work and film. He had a very close contact with the famous French film director Marcel Carne.

Jacques Pervert took part in the activities of the surrealists between 1925 and 1929. A self taught man, Prevert left school shortly after obtaining his primary school certificate. He disliked schoolmasters and exams, but was eager to exchange views about the books he read, the films he saw or the paintings he admired. At one stage Prevert broke away from the movement and gave vent to his anger writing 'Mort d'un Monsieur' (Death of a Gentleman) full of unusual images and cultural references which marked the emergence of a writer. Despite his break from Breton's groups, Prevert did not abandon surrealism for he was drawn to all that was strange and disturbing. He believed that dreams transport one to another reality. Two years after he broke away from the surrealists, Prevert joined the October group which once again gave him an opportunity to express his spirit of rebellion as an author.

The name of the October group chose for itself had strong political implication. It was clearly an allusion not only to the Russian theatre but also to the Russian revolution. Prevert was tempted to join the Communist Party, but in the end he did not become a member.

All three movies screened as weekly movies programme at Allian Francaise, were directed by Marcel Carne. Famous French actor Gean Gabin has starred in 'The port of Shadows' and 'Daybreak.' The third film was 'The Gates of Night.'

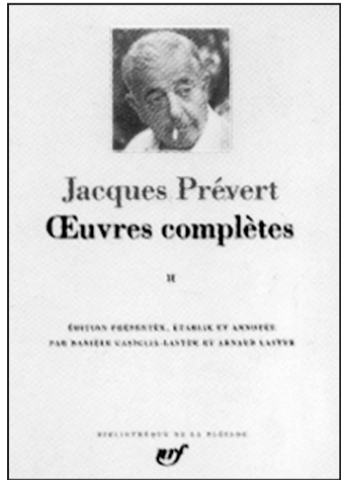

In the 'Daybreak,' Francois, a factory worker, shoots his evil genius and then himself. Trapped of his own volition in a small suburban hotel room, he mediates on the derisory sequence of events that has driven him to murder: the love affairs first with a shy young girl, Francoise, then with the mature and the tenacious rivalry of Valentin... all stress the great futility of his life. In 1937, the Popular Front saw its hopes dashed in Spain while the fateful Munich pact cast the shadow of war over Europe. This sense of doom was quickly reflected in most French films of that period. Suffering, suicide, sudden death... these themes became virtually the obsession of French filmmakers as the thirties drew to a close. Putting all the past events in a strict unity of time, place and action, this drama, built like a tragedy, is surely the purest, the most rigorous and the most perfect of all Marcel Carne's film.

In 'The port of Shadows' Jean Gabin stars a cynical yet vulnerable army deserter who arrives in the fog-bound port of Le havre seeking passage to a distant country. He adopts a new identity but his flight is halted when he falls in love with idealistic, trench-coated Michele Morgan, whom he attempts to wrest from the clutches to her domineering guardian. "The port of shadows" is the film of a doomed generation, a classic pessimism which echoed the storm clouds gathering over France in the late 1930's.

In 'The gates of Night,' Juju (Pieree Brasseur) lives in Lilas neighborhood, alcoholic and lazy, he is the friend of L'artiste (Georges Brassens), a guitarist-singer. One day a dangerous man runs into the cellar of L'artiste to escape from police. Juju likes him a lot, but he tries to seduce Maria (Dany Carrel), whom he loves in Secret; he kills Barbier to avoid him to be hurtful to her. Life goes on.

Between 1932 and 1936, Prevert wrote plays and spoken choirs (known as texts for several voices) for the October Group. He put the spotlight on the high and mighty of this world (politicians, sovereigns and industrialists), underlining their failings and absurdities by creating extravagant caricatures, describing their harmful and egoistic nature, revealing their schemes and tricks, and inciting the audience first to laugh and then to express their outrage.

Until the very end of his life, Prevert showed a deep interest in what was happening all over the world, and regularly expressed his views on current events. In 1950, he defended Henri Martin who had refused to fight against the Indo-Chinese ("People of Vietnam, do you hear...). The Algerian war and the use of torture aroused his anger, which he expressed in interviews for radio and in texts published mainly in Fatras (1996).

Like literature, painting occupied an important place in the work of Jacques Prevert. He was interested in a wide spectrum of art, starting from the miniatures of Le Livre du Cœur d'amours esprits (1457) by Rene of Anjou, to the paintings by Piero di Cosimo (1462-1521) or Botticelli (1445-1510), and later, Douanier Rousseau (1844-1910), especially his Sleeping Bohemian.

Alliance Francaise devotes this yearly festival with a promotional view to provide the common readers a chance to peep into the boundless domain of knowledge arousing an inclination affinity towards books.

Alliance Francaise de Dhaka introduces one of those French authors who emerged out of creative tension to voice liberty, fraternity and equality holding the spirit of humanity above all else.
