Malaysia's GDP may grow 0.3pc this year

AFP, Kuala Lumpur

Malaysia's economy will grow 0.3 per cent this year, 3.2 per cent next year and 5.7 per cent in 2003, the Malaysian Institute of Economic Research (MIER) predicted Tuesday.

The independent think-tank said in its economic outlook report that while gross domestic product (GDP) growth is expected to be positive this year overall, the second half is seen declining 1.2 per cent year-on-year.

"Positive growth in 2001 (is expected) thanks to the fiscal boost, year-end festivities, a slight uptake in consumer sentiment and improved leading indicators," MIER said.

It added private investment is expected to decline by 6.7 per cent in 2001 before recovering in 2002 with 7.9 per cent growth.

Developing countries demand greater share of global trade benefits at Doha

AFP, Geneva

Seven years after signing up to a raft of global trade liberalisation accords, developing countries complain they have yet to see the promised benefits and plan to a press for a better deal at an upcoming WTO conference in Qatar. They are calling on World Trade Organisation ministers to re-examine and re-negotiate agreements reached under the Uruguay Round of trade talks, which ended in 1994, before they commit to any new accords.

WTO trade ministers are to open a five-day eeting in the Qatari capital Doha Friday to draft an agenda for a fresh round of multilateral talks aimed at lowering global trade barriers.

"We note with great concern that the benefits of the existing multilateral trading system continue to elude developing countries," the Group of 77 developing countries, plus China, maintained in a statement last month.

The extent to which provisions of the Uruguay Round have been implemented was one of the thorniest issues before WTO ministers at their last meeting in Seattle in December 1999 and is likely to be so again in Doha.

Poorer countries among the 142-member WTO say that little has changed in the last two years, an assessment disputed by the United States and European Union, who argue that significant concessions have been made.

Developing countries saw their case bol-stered in a recent World Bank report that chided rich nations for failing to remove barriers to trade in the goods most exported by the developing world -- textiles, clothing and agriculture. The launch of a new "development" trade round could help poor countries weather the global downturn and fall-out from September 11 suicide attacks in the United States, said the study, entitled Global Economic Prospects. "To make this happen, the developed countries have to be willing to put agriculture and textiles on the negotiating table because those are the products that the world's poor produce,' asserted World Bank economist Uri Dadush.

If the industrialized world agreed to renegotiate some of the accords that poor countries have until now been unable to implement -- often because of their sheer technical complexity -- developing countries may be more open to launching a new trade round.

Poorer nations ask why should they now make new commitments in such areas as investment and competition policy -- as sought by developed countries -- if rich countries have yet to tear down trade barriers as mandated in previous agreements.

They are also seeking more time and special conditions for applying past agreements, along with guarantees they will not to be hauled before the WTO's dispute settlement body for failure to implement them

WTO Director General Mike Moore has said discussions on implementation are not likely to be easy in Doha, despite the many hours devoted to consultations on the issue in the last two years.

"(On) implementation, we've moved ahead. You'd have to be pretty mean-spirited to say that we haven't moved ahead," Moore told reporters on Friday.

But he acknowledged: "We're not there yet though.

The chairman of the WTO's ruling general council, Ambassador Stuart Harbinson of Hong Kong, has drawn up a separate document covering developing country concerns, half of which he believes could be decided on in Doha.

The main draft ministerial declaration is also laced with references to developmental needs, as has been called for by UN Secretary General Kofi Annan among others.

"I hope very much it (Doha) will start a new round of trade negotiations in which for the first time the developing countries will be able to insist that their interests are given priority," Annan told reporters here last week.

The draft text for example calls for negotiations to clarify rules on anti-dumping measures actions taken to penalize imports deemed by governments to have entered their markets at unfairly low prices.

European Trade Commissioner unable to agree to launch a new Pascal Lamy says the European Union will refuse a new round of WTO trade negotiations if environmental protection rules are not better-defined, French business newspaper Les Echos reported Monday

"My mandate is to refuse the launch of a round which would not include a clarification of rules governing the links between protection of the environment and the liberalization of trade," Lamy was quoted as saying in an interview.

Speaking before Friday's launch of a World Trade Organization ministerial meeting in Doha, Oatar, Lamy said if the ministers do not launch a new round of talks at the five-day meeting, "that would mean that the WTO is really sick.

"That would mean the multilateral system is no longer as capable of assuring a balance between liberalization and regulations as we would like it to be," he said.

Such a situation would be a don't want to enter into preserious blow," he said, "especially negotiation," he said.

AFP, Nuremberg, Germany

The German jobless total rose again in October, as the global economic slowdown led more and more companies in the euro zone's biggest economy to lay off workers, official figures showed on Tuesday.

In seasonally adjusted terms, the total number of people looking for work in Germany rose by 27,000 in October from September, figures published by the Federal Labour Office showed

"The labour market in Germany deteriorated further in October, office president Bernhard Jagoda said in a statement.

"The decline in unemployment usually seen in October was substantially weaker than in previous years. The reasons for the growing problems on the labour market are the global economic slowdown and structural problems in eastern Germany, lagoda explained.

In raw or unadjusted terms, the German jobless total fell, but only slightly, to 3.725 million in October from 3.743 million in October.
