Chittagong will occupy a very special place in the heart of Stuart Carlisle, who began his new innings as Zimbabwe captain at this port city with victories in a Test and a oneday international match against the

The 29-year-old was given the helm after tour captain Brian Murphy flew back home with a wrist injury after the first Test in Dhaka.

While talking to the media after defeating Bangladesh by five wickets in the first of the three-match Coca-Cola Series yesterday, the right hander bracketed the Chittagong wins as his most memorable experience in his 85-match one-day career.

His captain's knock of 44, after Zimbabwe lost their third wicket on 20 while chasing Bangladesh's paltry 156, also helped the tourists put a full stop to their 16-match losing streak in limited-overs

"It was a good start as we want to win the series 3-0. Although we lost some early wickets, but you know, it happens in cricket," said a happy

He said winning of the toss was crucial. "We knew wicket will be difficult in the morning. That's why I opted to field and could exploit the early morning moisture well."

Carlisle also said he was not at all bothered when they lost three wickets on 20. "This was the first match, and we desperately wanted to win this match to set the tone for a 3-0 win." he said

On the other hand, Bangladesh captain Khaled Mashud rued his luck for losing the toss. But he also pointed out that he had a relatively inexperienced side.

The International Cricket Council (ICC) has warned South Africa that their third Test against India will be struck from the records if match referee Mike Denness was barred from officiating.

the match starting on Friday. ICC chief executive Malcolm Speed responded: "Mike Denness was properly appointed by the ICC for this series and approved by both South Africa and India.

ICC at war

Cricket

REUTERS, Centurion

World cricket was braced for an unprecedented civil war on Friday as South Africa and India, in open defiance of the International Cricket Council (ICC), went ahead with their unofficial Test at Centurion.

Shaun Pollock's first ball to Shiv Das marked the official opening of hostilities as the teams took to the field for their third match, despite it being effectively declared null and void by the world governing body.

The crisis, sparked by India's refusal to play under ICC-appointed match referee Mike Denness after he handed out suspended bans to six of their players in the second Test, looked set to deepen further as the sport's traditional powers, England and Australia, declared their allegiance to the ICC.

In Australia -- as had occurred 24 hours earlier in India and South Africa -- the politicians joined their cricket officials in taking sides, with Prime Minister John Howard declaring: "The authority of the ICC should not be challenged in any way.

"It is imperative that administrators of all games have the tenacity, the courage and the authority to stamp out behaviour that brings any game into disrepute."

Lord MacLaurin, the head of the England and Wales Cricket Board said: "We stand full square behind the ICC...They control world cricket. We have anarchy at the moment."

MacLaurin hinted action could come within days as the ICC, which could call an extraordinary meeting of its executive council, attempts to defuse a situation in danger of poisoning relations and fragmenting the sport along racial lines.

The row over Denness mushroomed rapidly this week after he found Indian cricketing icon Sachin Tendulkar guilty of ball tampering in out suspended bans to a string of other Indian players, including skipper Sourav Ganguly, for overaggressive appealing.

The head of India's cricket board, Jagmohan Dalmiya, first demanded a right of appeal. Rebuffed by the ICC, he upped the stakes by warning South Africa they would boycott the Centurion game unless Denness was sacked. South Africa, under pressure from their own government, duly complied and the stand-off with the ICC began as it stripped the match of its official Test status. For the ICC, the position of their neutral officials -- Denness is a former England Test captain -- is For one billion passionate Indians, however, Tendulkar is a sporting god whose good name is to be revered as much as his talent as the world's leading batsman.

An accusation of tampering --Tendulkar, according to Denness,
