Trendy clothes for a festive occasion

Henry's Heritage displays its new collection for Eid at its showroom at Dhanmondi's Rd number 27

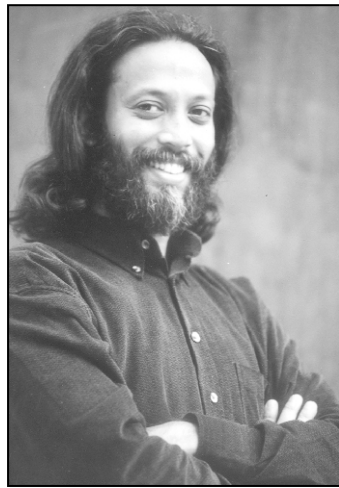

MUNEERA PARBEEN

HENRY'S Heritage-a trendy boutique-has earned a name for itself with its ready-to-wear designer clothes for the fashion-conscious urbanites.

Since its beginning, the house has been working relentlessly to bring a new look into fashion with each passing season, and popularising the traditional deshi (local) patterns in its works.

Last week, the boutique opened an exhibition of its new clothes called the "Shaan Collection" on occasion of Eid. Deep shades of red, maroon, black and brown dominate the current collection with combinations of different forms of work decorating the clothes.

Shahrukh Shahid is the main designer of this boutique, and works with Pami, the other designer of the house. Shahrukh says he has spent a lot of time on the present collection to give it a really new look. The use of combinations of embroidery, block print, applique and lace figures extensively in this collection. The designers have used silk, georgettes and also cotton for the Eid collection.

Sarees have been hand-painted and embroidered with stitches and small sequins. Silk sarees with anchals in contrast colours have been worked on in appliqué work. Shahrukh has brought a new touch to the traditional applique work, using nets in place of contrast coloured fabrics. This gives the applique work a new dimension.

The silk sarees in deep tones also have heavily worked anchals on which the combination of block print and zardosi work or zari embroidery gives finesse unlike many others. The cotton sarees are also in heavily embroidered and block printed to give them a look fit for the occasion.

Shahrukh plays with colours to create different effects on different collections. In his present collection, he has worked with block print, machine and hand-embroidery, brush and spray paint on cottons and silks. Shahrukh has used red as a prominent colour in this collection. Black has also been used extensively. Simple lines of silver sequins on red georgette make a beautiful ensemble that can easily be worn to tea parties and other occasions.

Shahrukh's sarees are all stunning combinations of colour, fun and festivity, many on handloom cotton, which the artist buys from Tangail. And most have been decorated with sprays of colour and block print to give them an ethnic touch. The block print motifs are floral but come in a broader and larger combination of geometrical patterns. For example, the large triangular or square shape of the outline is softened by the floral motifs in the smaller blocks. "The reason," he says, "is to even out the harsher outlines of the more modern geometrical shapes through the traditional floral or alpona patterns."

In the salwar kameez range, georgette 3-pc ensembles have been given a new look with work with sequins and combinations of painting and block prints. The

Turquoise blue silk saree

Purple and blue 3-piece ensemble salwar kameez range are all in bright and happy colours, with a touch of somberness to even out the effect of heat. Most are swathed in happy colours of pastel shades and have been block-printed and embroidered on.

The punjabis are perhaps the most extensive line of work here. Most of the punjabi's have matching shawls with them making them exclusive designer ensembles. The punjabis in silk and cotton have been block printed and embroidered.

In addition the boutique also has its own collection of shawls which have been designed keeping the winter season in mind. These are also worth a look.

Henry's Heritage employs over a dozen workers, including artisans, block print and hand embroidery experts at its Lalmitia factory in the city. All colours and essential accessories like block motifs used in their work are bought from the local market though they are mostly foreign in their origin.

The works created by boutique houses have inched their way forward without any patronisation from any big house or institution at all, the artist says. If more workshops by leading designers in the region were held regularly, the standard of the local designers would improve further, he feels.

In recent times Shahrukh has created waves in the city with his collection of paintings on rare birds of the country. Shahrukh has made his voice heard even as a fashion designer to make everyone sit up and take notice of the man's adverse effects on the fauna of the country.

The Eid collection also sees extensive use of paintings of trees, leaves and the nature.

The exhibition is open to all
