Crossing the boundaries

Sanchita Islam, a British-Bangladeshi artist, tries to explore the social setting of three countries through a combined display of her works on art, video and photography at the gallery of Alliance Francaise de Dhaka

AZIZ AMIRUL

FFORTS of a British-Bangladeshi artist seem to give a fresh thrust in the world of Bangladeshi art as Sanchita Islam holds a solo exhibition at the gallery of Alliance Francaise in Dhaka.

The show titled 'A Bit of Bangladesh Brought Home' presents a recipe of painting, photo and a video film much to the admiration of the art lovers of the city.

Glimpses of three cities --New York. London and Dhaka. -- in the works of Sanchita reveal a crossing of borders and the vast migration of Bangladeshis to the metropolitan centres of the West

Around forty acrylic paintings and photographs by Sanchita in the ongoing exhibition portray skyline of the three cities viewed from rooftop by the artist. Sanchita, in the year 2000, sat at different spots in Dhaka, Sylhet, Barisal and Calcutta to capture the multi-layered skyline of these bustling cities. 'It provides me with a sense of freedom when I carry on with my works from the rooftop', says the artist. 'People watch me as a foreign girl if I work on the ground and this could be an important reason for the selection of rooftop as my working environment. Moreover, I can have a birdseye view of the panaromic setting if I take my position on a high location. 'Be it Brick Lane of London, Manhattan of New York or some suburban location of Bangladesh the considerably imprecise sites and their situations are almost similar when viewed from skyhigh angles.' A meticulous motive of her not choosing the ground level as common mass only to suppress the polar difference of social ordeal and customs of a variety of locations of the world. However, this matter of escapism turns out to be a bit intentional when one sees the video as Sanchita comes low down to the ground where an atmosphere is ruled by strict conventional lifestyle of the suburban and rural community of Bangladesh. None of her exhibits carries a caption; as such her idea is to keep those pieces untitled for the sake of maintaining a psychic parallel scenario between the sites of the three metropoli> tan centres. Sanchita Islam often feels separated from her social surroundings, born and brought up in the British society yet having a lace of relationship in Bangladesh. A sort of identity crisis finds hard to cope being a Benlooms in her heart when she gali in Britain while at the same time termed as a British citizen when stationed in Bangladesh.

She has so far finished a number of art projects here and she feels the importance of dispeling 'erroneous stereotypes' about Bangladesh in the media protrayals of foreign origin. Most of the issues and news items revolving Bangladesh go on projecting flood, violence and poverty though there are lots of positive themes to be illustrated about this country, as felt by Sanchita. One with possession of foreign culture often has to face harsh conditions in Bengali societies yet it makes Sanchita feel fascinated about the beautiful, though testing country of Bengal!

pomegranate, a fruit of Bangladesh, to her grandmother in the 30-minute video film and at one point this very fruit become a vital link of communication between the representatives of two different traditions and generations she feels highly emotional as her grandmother loves 'the foreign girl' too much yet sees her as a 'strange creature' with the custody of an entirely opposite custom from that of a typical Bengali. Sanchita was sent to New York and Bangladesh by the sponsors from London Arts and the Tower Hamlets Film Fund to make the film involved with subjects of scattered Bengali communities.
