Matt, Ricky back Steve

AFP, Melbourne

Cricketer-of-the-year Matthew Hayden and teammate Ricky Ponting have gone into bat for their beleaguered captain Steve Waugh, saying the scrutiny of the Australian skipper is unwarranted.

Waugh, 36, has struggled for form this domestic summer, prompting speculation he might be near the end of his long and illustrious career.

The captain's uneasy relationship with the Australian media has only increased the tension.

The skipper lost his cool during the last press conference of the season after frequent questions about team selections -- an area in which he now has little input after the Australian Cricket Board decided to remove Waugh and his deputy Adam Gilchrist from the selection panel for overseas tours.

Hayden singled out Waugh for praise when he accepted the Allan Border Medal for Australia's top cricketer here on Monday night.

On Tuesday the Queenslander followed up his tribute, saying Waugh had been under unjustified pressure during the summer, particularly when Australia was undefeated in the Tests and narrowly missed the one-day finals against South Africa and New Zealand.

Asked if Waugh had copped unfair criticism, Hayden said: "Well, in my opinion he has, because he is a gentleman that I just truly honour and respect as a cricketer and as a person."

"It's not really for me to say what the media has and hasn't done to Stephen over the last little bit, but I think he's a tremendous cricketer and I'm sure that he'll be out there fighting his guts out in South Africa."

Australia leave for South Africa this week for a three-Test series against Shaun Pollock's team.

Hayden said Waugh had been a "quiet supporter" of his for years.

"Cricket's a tough game, professional sport is a tough game," he said.

"There's a lot of highs and lots of lows and I guess you really need those people in your corner and Stephen has been one of those people for me."

On the night of the presentation, Hayden said: "I find Stephen a tremendously inspirational character."

"Stephen has been going through a reasonably tough trot over the last few weeks, but I hear on the grapevine he calls someone like (new national squad member) Shane Watson and says 'mate, can't wait until you're in the side'."

"To someone like Shane Watson, that means the world, that means the earth -- I think that's Australian, that's the way we want to be, we want to say 'good on you' when you do well."

"I'm saying good on Stephen, because I think he's a fantastic leader."

Ponting, named Monday as Australia's limited-overs cricketer of the year, said it was up to the team to ease the pressure on Waugh by performing to expectations.

"It's always a tough position, I suppose, when you're the captain of a side that not's performing as well as they should be," he said, referring to Australia's failure to make the tri-series one-day finals.

"We were world champions at the time and New Zealand were beating us nearly every week, so it's a hard position to be in."

"I think he's handled it pretty well. There's not much you can do about it, you've just got to really put that behind you and hopefully our performances over the next couple of weeks will help him out in the media and he'll start getting some positive press again."

No wholesale change on Aussie team

REUTERS, Sydney

Australia's cricket selectors have dismissed calls to make radical changes to their aging team during the upcoming series against South Africa.

Some of Australia's most experienced players, including Steve and Mark Waugh and Shane Warne, have all come under fire from local media after below-par displays in the recent Test and one-day series' against New Zealand and South Africa.

Australia drew each of their three Tests against New Zealand after rain prevented any real chance of a result before white-washing South Africa 3-0.

But Australia's failure to make the finals of the triangular one-day series prompted calls for changes to the side before next year's World Cup.

Australian selector Allan Border, however, said there was no need to panic and make unnecessary changes to either the Test team or the one-day side when they leave Sydney on Thursday for a three-month tour of South Africa and programme." India's cricket-crazy television audience, estimated to be around 300 million, ensures the national cricket team attracts sponsors wherever it plays.

It's absence, however, generates huge losses to organisers, as both the PCB and the Sharjah-based Cricketers Benefit Fund Series (CBFS) will testify.

Tournaments in Sharjah, which has hosted more one-day internationals (181) than any other venue in the world, invariably end up in the red when India is not taking part.

The Indian government banned its national team from playing in Sharjah and other off-shore venues like Singapore and Toronto in the wake of the match-fixing scandal.

The Asian Test Championship has generated little interest in India's absence, with both Pakistan and Sri Lanka struggling to fix dates for the final after both thrashed Bangladesh.

SA may go for more black

INTERNET, Johannesburg

The South African government is considering legislation to force the country's sporting bodies to field more black players in their teams.

"As early as next month, I will be meeting with national [sports] federations to consider their targets for transformation," sports minister Ngconde Balfour said on Tuesday.

Balfour said he fully supported the stance taken by United Cricket Board president Percy Sonn, who forced the selectors to pick a second black player, Justin Ontong for the third Test against Australia six weeks ago.

Sonn's decision sparked controversy, but Balfour has challenged other sports administrators to be equally interventionist.

He added: "I am giving serious consideration to legislation that will speed up the pace of transformation."

Formal quotas already operate in virtually all of South African domestic sport.

Provincial cricket sides are currently required to field three black or coloured cricketers in every match and next season the quota will be four.

But the national team has no

specific quota imposed on it, apart from a loose agreement that the side "will be a team of colour".

In the last two years the national side has included two non-white cricketers on a regular basis, including opening batsman Herschelle Gibbs, who is termed "coloured".

That led to speculation -- never confirmed -- that Balfour had insisted a "black African" be included.

The return to form of pace bowler Makhaya Ntini in the one-day tournament in Australia will reduce the pressure on the selectors to include uncapped players to fulfil any quota.

South Africa has not fielded an all-white Test cricket team since November 1998 or a rugby team since July 1999.

But Balfour said sport had lagged behind the rest of society in eliminating the legacy of white minority rule.

And he aimed barbed comments at several former cricketers who had criticised Sonn's actions.

"Those advocating merit selection argue that patience and caution must be exercised in bringing black sports persons through into provincial and national teams," he said.

"There is seldom an admission that factors other than ability and skill hold black sportspersons back."
