Shahid tight-lipped, on fresh remand

STAR REPORT

DB police have failed to gather any specific information from 'notorious criminal' Saidur Rahman Shahid at the end of a three-day remand yesterday.

DB on Wednesday arrested Shahid, also a DCC ward commissioner, in connection with the murder of Azizur Rahman Khokon.

Shahid remained tight-lipped most of the time during his interrogation by detectives and simply denied all allegations brought against him, investigation sources told The Daily Star yesterday.

Shahid was produced before the CMM's court yesterday on expiry of the three-day remand. Later he was also shown arrested in connection with the BNP leader advocate Habibur Rahman Mondol murder case and the Investigation Officer (IO) of the case sought a fresh remand for 10 days in that connection.

Shahid's defence lawyers also submitted a bail petition but the court rejected it and placed him on a four-day remand.

Police sources said Shahid, who started out as a vegetable vendor, became a millionaire don of the city's underworld.

Born in a poor family at AK Das Road in the city's Sutrapur area, Shahid is the second of his four brothers and three sisters and his father Ashraf Ali was a construction worker, local people close to the family said.

More power plants to become 'strategic business units'

RAZIUR RAHMAN

Some more plants of the Power Development Board (PDB) are going to be converted into Strategic Business Units (SBUs) to improve their performance.

Surprisingly, officials and employees' unions in PDB, which were dead against any kind of unbundling of the power sector, are apparently supporting the concept of SBU.

However they are still against turning any PDB plant into holding company.

SBUs would be partially autonomous with improved managerial bodies and maintain their accounts of cost and profit. However PDB will have authority over the management.

"PDB will have more authority on SBUs than it has over its holding company like the Power Grid Company of Bangladesh (PGCB)," said a PDB official. PDB has very little authority over the holding company now, he said.

By forming the PGCB, PDB has lost a lot of assets and it has to pay that company huge charges regularly to use its grids. But SBUs will not cause any financial burden for PDB, another source said.

There will be scopes for solving various problems through 'internal arrangement' between SBUs and PDB, which is absent in case of a holding company, he said.

Energy ministry sources said the government has decided to unbundle the power sector by converting PDB plants into holding companies or SBUs because of 'constant pressure' from major donors.

PDB's 110 MW Haripur plant was turned into a SBU in 2000 and the process to make the 724 MW Ashuganj plant a holding company began last year.

Generation capacity of the Haripur plant increased by over 60 per cent after making it a SBU, official sources said.

It is being managed by a Plant Management Board (PMB) comprising its officials and representatives of PDB Board and other bodies concerned.

Officials and employees of the plant are getting 2.5 per cent of the operational surplus of the plant as financial benefit.

Following the success of Haripur plant, the government is converting the 100 MW Baghabari plant into a SBU and the process is likely to be completed
