Agargaon slum a den of city's criminals

ABUL KALAM AZAD

More than one lakh people in Agargaon and its adjoining areas are held hostage by hoodlums, who run phensidyl business and other criminal activities from the BNP basti (slum).

According to intelligence agencies and slum sources, more than 100 criminals belonging to several factions are involved in different kinds of criminal activities.

The criminals have used the BNP basti, one of the most crime-prone slums in the city, as their base for years to run illegal arms and drugs business. Firecrackers are also made and sold in the slum.

Hardly a day passes by without a criminal incident taking place in the slum or its adjoining areas. Gunfight between rival factions over control of phensidyl business, killing, abduction, explosion of crackers, extortion and mugging are regular features.

Residents of the area hold police indifference responsible for the lawlessness now prevailing in the area. Unabated criminal activities have forced many to move out to different localities over the last few months.

"They left because this place is no longer safe to live in," said Khokon, a resident of the area said.

Many slum-dwellers also left to avert torture by both the law enforcers and the criminals.

More than 50,000 people live in the area's nine slums, stretching from Agargaon bazaar in the east to Shyamoli Road No 2 in the west. These are Karam Ali's slum, Shahidertek slum, PWD slum, Noor Mohammad Ali's slum, Sardar's slum, Balurtek slum, Kashem's slum, Motahar's slum and Poddar's slum.

Auto-rickshaw drivers, rickshaw-pullers, van drivers, street vendors, day labourers, hawkers and different types of small businessmen stay in these slums.
