Natural colours of life

Four artists from Bangladesh, India and United States hold a group exhibition of their works, done in natural colour, at Gulshan in the city

AZIZ AMIRUL

AN art exhibition titled 'Jibon Rasa' (Essence of life), of four artists, two from Bangladesh and one each from India and the United States, is currently being held at 'Essential's', an art gallery located at Gulshan circle 2, in the city.

Ruby Gaznavi, who owns Aranya, a clothing and home accessories outlet in the city, teamed up Rokeya Sultana and Arham-ul Haq Chowdhury, from Bangladesh along with Alka Mathur, who comes from India and Sarah Sutro, a Dhaka-based American painter. The four artists worked together at Aranya during a three-month workshop and explored various possibilities of painting with natural colour, mostly acquired from sources of plant and crushed flower.

All of the works displayed at the exhibition have featured abstract subjects, yet contained very realistic themes, which ultimately gave birth to a combined form of work, mingled with pragmatic concept as well, one that has possessed an ethereal touch.

Rokeya Sultana has presented a number of figurative works where surrealism existed through the depiction of some strange female anatomy of a half-human half-creature entity. A strong message of motherhood and reproductive capability of female living species have been released in most of Rokeya's works and apart from the figure herself, abundance of tiny life forms are also found in the settings of the works. Rokeya Sultana applied, in her works, shades of light brown, drab reddish yellow and etched marks of pencil. As Rokeya said, 'The earth colours create a sensation of freshness within me and reflect my preoccupation with mother earth'.

Sarah Sutro, an American

painter who has, since the last few years, been residing in Dhaka by virtue of her husband's job, has displayed works, almost all of which depict large, deep green, brown, blue and ashy coloured abstract forms which Sarah termed as 'seeds'. It is an irony, the source of the paints had come from crushed leaves and flower-petals, those have once been living; similarly, Sarah's subjects, that is, seeds, have too, capacity of producing new generation of life form. Seeds, drawn by Sarah Sutro have come in a diverse range of shapes and thus have released a message of the abundance of living creatures around the world, each of who possess different characteristic outlook from the other, yet all have been fertile. 'Transparency and texture of the colour has helped me merge my paintings and drawings into a spiritual quest'. Sarah's solo exhibition of watercolor works was recently held at Divine gallery in the city.

Alka Mathur, an Indian-born artist who has been staying in the city since some time, has displayed several fine works those she had completed while following the courses of the workshop at Aranya. Her works contained map-like subjects with Bangla inscription and tiny dark symbolic patterns of water line, landscape and aerial route. Here she wanted to present a combined map of Bangladesh and India, trying to symbolize unity between the two neighbouring countries, hence it could be an initial step towards strengthening global amity. 'Natural colour, block prints, the garment (a symbol of women's dignity and honour) reflects back to my motherland Rajasthan', said Alka.

Works of Arham Chowdhury reflected a spiritual quest as well, that of worldly themes. Baul, a bard and singer of the rural regions of Bengal is a typical subject of Arham in whom he has discovered a quality of aesthetic importance, hard to find among other characters of the society. Arham's inclination towards Bengali culture and heritage seemed to be deep-rooted as another of his works, titled, 'Dhadha' or riddle, depicted a figurative sketch of a fish-shaped entity within which there have been observed few lines of Bengali riddle of the folk-community. Like Rokeya Sultana, Arham has also used light brown and ashy dark shades, those that reflect the original symbolic colours of the Bengali nature, those of the earth, and of the stormy skies during late spring and monsoon.

In the workshop at Aranya, the artists experimented with painting on cloth of cotton and silk, which was later on, processed at the factory of the shopping outlet. The results were quite unusual and beyond expectation. To the surprise of the artists, colours extracted from natural sources of plants and petals, changed while they were painting. Later on, the artists decided to paint upon hand-made paper as it was not possible for them to process the cloth themselves. To see the results, top artists like Kibria and others worked with natural colours at their studios in the FineArts Institute.

It was full of fun, an experience the artists would relish throughout their lives. The results were promising at times while confusing at others. It was a challenging job to work with natural colours of leaves and flowers.

The quartet felt that their journey towards a new direction has only begun with this new and exciting medium that has brought them close to the essence of life.

The exhibition is open to all every day from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. till May 30.
