New book

Investigating metal casting

A new book focuses light on metal casting industry, threatened with extinction

CULTURE DESK

IANGEADESH METAL CASTING Five Techniques

Bangladesh Metal Casting: Five Techniques. By Matthew S. Friedman. Dhaka, UPL, 2001, 72 pp. Tk. 300.

OME seventy years ago, AE Porter, in the Census Report of Bengal (19311) wrote 'Notes on the processes of decaying indsutreis'. In his introduction, he mentioned that the Notes were being written 'to place on record... processes of those industries which have decayed or are threatened with extinction owing to the competition of mass production'. One of the twenty-three indigenous industries that had been 'seriously affected by the importation of cheap enamel, aluminum and porcelain vessels' was brass and bell-metal indusry. After seven decades, Matthew Friedman, has found the indsutry still in the doldrums. This has inspired him to write the manufacture of metal casting before the industry 'fades away' or is 'lost'. As regards the focus of his study, the writer has preferred to go for a case study of Dhamrai craft-clusters. Here it may be mentioned that Dhamrai is about 39 kilometers northwest of Dhaka.

The 72page monographs is rather a report on the five different processes or casting techniques that are being used in creating various types of metal objects. Before proceeding to deal with the intricate details of the various techniques, the author has very briefly mentions about the occupational castes engaged in the trade, its organizational set-up, and about the metals used in the actual making of the objects. The most important contribution of Firedman, to my mind, is undoubtedly his infinite patiene and keen obsevation power in noting down to the minutest detail the steps of each technique used in making the objects. Observations such as 'the color of casted objects. often varies depending upon the quality of the metals used' (p. 21); 'the darker the shade, the more expensive the price' (P.21); 'not all objects that have a dark color are necessarily old' (p. 21); and 'antique pieces tend to have smooth features' (p.22) are few examples of his carefully recorded obsevations. We are pleased to learn from the author that workers engaged in the art of 'lost wax method' of Dhamrai can one could find in other countries, and that the craftsmen are masters at copying figures of Hindu and Buddhist statues from simple photographs. He cautions us, however, that 'some of the statues look so authentic with their rich patinas, they are sometimes sold as old pieces' (p. 36). The writer then goes on to describe the other four techniques used in metal casting-clay casting method, sand casting method, spoon making, and plate making. He reminds us that 'the skill in knowing what is required to have just the right cnsistency comes from years of experience.

The author deserves credit for his laborious fieldwork. The little book has added to our existing knowledge on the subject, even if on a modest scale. The excellent photographs taken by Jay Andrson have undoubltedly enriched the quality of the work.

The author, however, needs to delve on aspects like labour, capital, organization, marketing, etc. besides widenign the canvas of his investigation to include other metal object manufacturing areas of the country. This will undoubtedly make the book much more wortheir. The book is remarkably free from printing errors.

To create public awareness about the languishing state of the industry, the book needs to be translated into Bangla, and its price kept within the pur-
