Of human bondage and endeavour

North South University showcases works of Lovely and Madhob, two disabled artists of CRP

FAYZA HAQ

LOVELY and late Madhob of CRP (Centre for Rehabilitation of the paralysed), who are already acquainted to many at Dhaka and overseas just by their annual calendar, greeting card work and exhibition at the British Council years ago, had their joint exhibition of old and new works at the North South University. This was a part of a programme organized by the NSU media club, guided by Professor M. Harunur Rashid of the English Dept. NSU. The art display was a part of a seminar at the NSU (North South University) premises. The afternoon discussions were followed by a show of the well-known film on differently abled people "Bihongo" in which Lovely and Madhob's characters were well portrayed.

We know that both Lovely and Madhob are paralysed neck downwards and while Lovely is a mouth artist, Madhob painted with an artificial hand using his paintbrush attached to his hand. Whereas Lovely is a teen-aged student, Madhob had worked efficiently and diligently for years for CRP. Both were victims of accidents, one from the top of a house and the senior artist had fallen from a tree during his teen-aged years. Both overcame their disability and led as active and useful life as possible.

In one of Lovely's painting (one being sold at the set for Tk 10,00 at the outset) contained a merry-go-round done in shades of blue, brown red brining in the details of the seated children in the boxes of the merry-go-round fixed on the lawn. People are seen on both sides with bright coloured clothes -- blue, pink, yellow, mauve, and blue -- dark hair and outstretched hands showing mirth and excitement. There is a tree at the side with its shades of brown put in deftly for the bark and branches while the leaves are pale green outlined by dark emerald. The sky is a subtle mixture of blue and yellow clouds.

In the next one we see flowers with details for the petals. The combination of colours are gentle and muted except for some mauve and red. White, yellow, pale orange and soft pink along with the pale centres represent the mass of fresh flowers along with ferns done in details on a white and yellow patch. Behind are the shades of blue-green to bring in the rest of the garden.

Another water-colour brings in a simple woman in a saffron sari with indigo border and a mauve blouse. She appears to be sitting in the ground surrounded by trees and bushes brought in by gentle vertical strokes of topaz-like orange, mustard yellow, green blue and beige. In front of her is apparently a small hillock or a large covered "dekchi" in which she is making "pithas".

We see children at play on a paved street, and the subjects are young women and men on their wheel-chairs. There appears to be a resting lady among their midst and appears to be enjoying herself sunning on a makeshift bed. The children are dressed in maroon and blue while the lady has an orange and brown sari. Trees and hedges are brought both in the background and the left forefront.

Sailing boats have also been brought into Lovely's water-washes and in one we see a black house-boat, with its house-portion painted in brilliant blues, orange, yellow and pin for its roofs, windows and doors. The people in the barge are apparently young people and dressed in red skirts and mauve skirts. The young man is in blue. Their faces are shades of sun burnt-brown and pink while the water are waves of gray blue blended with gray and brown. To the right forefront is a tree with enormous leaves of blue, red and gold.

Lovely has taken great pains to depict people at play or rest in her other paintings. In one we see cute goats in the forefront or perhaps wild deer among the green, blue and yellow grass. In between we see a pale blue pond with brown land on top in a dramatic sweep. Beyond that scene are a hut, a beige haystack, a woman resting under a gray-green tree, while two women and a child are seen chatting and waving their hands with emotion.

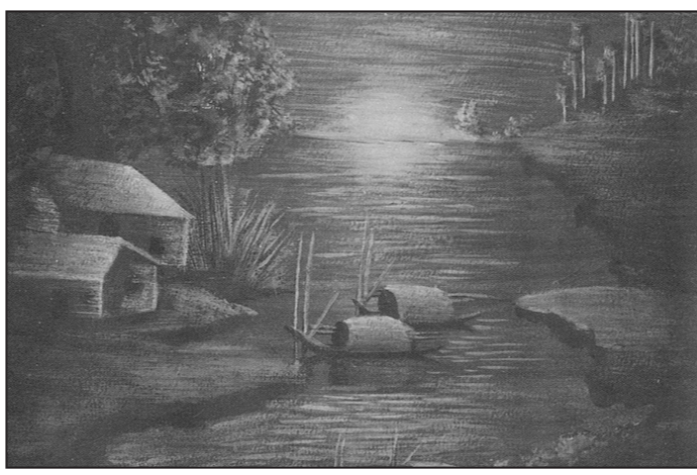

The teen-aged artist then depicts a woman seated on a bench, with a vermilion blouse and a long blue, white and mauve skirt. At her side is a tree surrounded by grass and bushes while behind we see the sky in forms of folds of greenish blue and pink. The forefront of the ground is awash of pale beige with hints of emerald grass and a bush.

One of the paintings by Madhob has two figures, one bending down and the other holding on to her gently. You can't tell their sexes as the contours and colours are unisex and have done in dramatic and mysterious black. In the foreground there is more jet-black which adds to the Hardy-like vision. The river is like sheets of cascading brown water while there is a wild bush in gray in the forefront along with a tree which has all the details of a palm tree. The background has a romantic full moon couched in puffy and distance delineated in mauve and green, while the grass blades on the river side, rocks and trees in front have been done with masterful dexterous strokes, with a fascinating eye for detail.

Next we see two black boats and appear to be floating in the artist's imagination coloured with shades of orange. The water and sky have blended with the gold shades, mauve and black stripes.

Along with this is Madhob's delineation of villages done with orange, black and brown. There are cliffs along with stones in deep colour. Light hues in the background bring in the opal dying moon. There are clumps of trees on the right and bigger version of them to the left. Here we find pulsating shades of brown, orange. The field is a mixture of variations of green and brown. There is a house included in the composition which appears to grow on a slope. There appears to be a winding road leading from the forefront to the back of the composition and along the road are green topped trees. On one side of the house are tiny black boats to lend more interest to the creation.

In another painting we see farmers in a paddy field and the plants are shown in emerald and jade shades. "Barrel" blue stripes bring in the sky above. The foreground has large brown trees while the ground is also depicted in burnt sienna and burnt umber.

Professor M. Harunur Rashid, dwelling on Madhob, says, "The manner in which Madhob used to paint with his artificial hand was remarkable indeed. I believe his painting to be wonderful indeed, even if they had been done by a normal painter. He not only overcame his disability but proved that human beings could conquer difficulties and could prove their worth. He had a wonderful sensitivity as a painter as he had a superb sense of colour and his landscapes are indeed remarkable."

Some of his works are partly surrealistic while the others are traditional representational paintings of landscapes and birds. Some are impressionistic and quite nouveau in style. The medium are oil and water-colour. In my opinion, they give us a unique glimpse of nature around us as well as prove his dexterity and keen eye. He knew that he was dying at a certain stage but he continued uncomplaining with his work at CRP and his painting along with it. Madhob was half paralysed. These have been taken by NSU from the personal collection of Julian Francis.

As for Lovely, she paints with a brush held between her teeth and she too gives her best to the paintings that she creates. She paints mostly with water-colour. She is paralysed from neck downwards but she never gives up. She paints various themes such as a village girl, river scene, villages, people of CRP at play. Comments Professor M. Harunur Rashid, "Here again is a proof of human courageous she is just entering her teen ages as she did not succumb before odds which might have overwhelmed someone else in the same situation. What CRP has given these two individuals is courage and a contented life and one has naturally all praises for these two artists."

Valery Taylor, the coordinator of CRP (Centre for Rehabilitation of the Paralysed) along with NSU has done a splendid job of bringing to the notice of art lovers of Dhaka that the physically differently abled can be admirable and talented too.
