T Alliance Française, from 5th July to 2nd August, at the Andre Malraux Gallery , viewers have the opportunity to discover an exhibition dedicated to the eastern part of France and its famous painters, politicians and historic or scenic sites

One of these famous personalities is Georges de la Tour who was born in 1593 at Vic-sur-Seille. Lorraine. He was a painter mostly of candlelit subjects, who was well known in his own time but then forgotten until well into the 20th century, when the identification of many formerly misattributed works established his modern reputation as a giant of French painting.

La Tour became a master painter and eventually settled at Luneville. King Louis XIII, Henry II of Lorraine, and the Duke de la Ferte were among the collectors of his work. Although the chronology of La Tour's output is uncertain, it is clear that initially he painted in a realistic manner and was influenced by the dramatic chiaroscuro of Caravaggio or followers.

The paintings of la Tour's maturity, however, are marked by a startling geometric simplification of the human forms and by the depiction of interior scenes lit only by the glare of candles or torches. His religious paintings done in this manner have a monumental simplicity and stillness that express both contemplative quiet and

The body of his work was conclusively identified by the German art historian Hermann Voss and by other scholars after 1915. La Tour's work also exhibits a high degree of originality in colour and composition; the characteristic simplification of forms gives many of his pictures a deceptively modern appearance. Among La tour's most impressive candlelit scenes are "The Newborn", "St. Joseph the Carpenter" and "The lamentation over St. Sebastian", "The Hurdygurdy Player" and "The Sharper" are among his less numerous daylight compositions.

The exhibition commemorates the 350th year of his death through pictorial books by famous authors such as the former director of the Louvres, Pierre Rosenberg. He came from the eastern part of France near Nancy and so becomes an integral part of the exhibit as he was one of the outstanding French painters of the 17th century. There was an exhibition in 1995 at Metz to contain his works under the title "Georges de La Tour: Again with shadow and light.

Dealing with the geography and history of the eastern region of France, in the city of Nancy, light is thrown on the Place Royale which is now known as Place Stanislaus in honour of Stanislaus who managed to bring Lorraine, which was an independent territory, back to France without any war. As for Lorraine, it was earlier known as Lotharinjai which was a name after Lothair, one of the three sons of Charlesmagne. Continuing to discover the eastern part of France are more books on these subjects. There are also video tapes, one being dedicated to the city of Bitche which is famous for military reasons as a fortress was built by Vauban the war minister of Louis XIV and you had the German Empire on one side and the French kingdom on the other side. When invasions took place on France the German troops entered from here. This fortress was used until 1870 when Prussia invaded France after which Moselle and Alsace were given to the Prussian Empire after the armistice. Nancy is seen with its highly decorated palace with its angles touched with gold. This was a new style that began from that period. For the viewers there are several books on Alsace and Lorraine one of them being dedicated to the Peace Treaty of Westphalia which ended the Thirty Years War, 1618-1648 and explanation is given as to why this was a sensitive part .Another book is dedicated to Lemondpoint Care who was born in Nancy who twice became the president of France. first in 1913 and 1922 as he was considered the only person who could force Germany to respect the Treaty of Versailles. There is also a book on Metz as there is a very beautiful cathedral there and as it is a military city as it was the first big city to confront when Germany invaded France. The railway station is remarkable and it was built in the 19th century when the French army as the troops first concentrated here before being dispatched to different fronts, to retreat or attack. This station thus was equipped with enormous platforms as thousands of troops and horses congregated Alsace, separated from Germany by the Rhine, is also highlighted bringing in Strasbourg, the wonderful cathedral with its gothic style and other cities with houses constructed with graceful columns such as Saverne and Guebwiller. The food and costumes are also illustrated

In the video tapes Moselle and Meurthe et Moselle, Nancy and Metz are concentrated on along with Vosges where the main cities are Epininal and Bar-le-duc amidst the backdrop of gentle mountains with many woods and lakes. There is also Meuse where there is the famous city of Verdun, where many hundred thousand men died during the World War I. The second important part of the eastern part of France is Alsace with Bas-rhain too is the city of Reims which is where French kings were crowned, the first being Clovis

There are two other tapes which are being screened, one being on Ecole de Nancy which a particular school of architecture which used iron as glass and wood. This city is also famous for its crystal "Daume". This crystal production is spread out in the villages around as in St. Louis.

founded in the reign of Louis XIV and Lemberg. Emile Galli, the renowned crystal designer, is from this region and art nouveau found some of its roots here at Ecole de
