Rivaldo has made it clear that the return of coach Louis van Gaal to Barcelona was the reason behind his agreement to part company with the Catalan club.

"Van Gaal is the main cause of my departure," the Brazilian World Cup winner was quoted as saying in the Spanish press on Tuesday. "I don't like van Gaal and I am sure that he doesn't like me either."

Rivaldo's comments, made in a telephone interview on Brazilian television show "TV Record". confirmed speculation that Dutchman van Gaal and the former World Player of the Year were likely to be incompatible.

During van Gaal's last spell in charge at the Nou Camp, between 1997-2000, Rivaldo challenged his coach's authority by demanding to play in the centre of the pitch rather than out on the left wing.

Van Gaal won the battle of wills and Rivaldo was forced to apologise for his comments after sitting out two games on the sidelines, but relations between the two suffered irrevocable damage.

Barcelona have avoided the possibility of another embarrassing dispute by deciding to release Rivaldo from his contract with a year still left to run.

The decision means that the multi-talented forward is now a free agent and will be able to move to any club of his choice

If Real decide not to pursue Rivaldo, Italy appears to be the Brazilian's most likely destination.

Lazio made an offer last year and they recently expressed a renewed interest, while AC Milan have long been keen on the player.

Milan are reportedly in talks with Rivaldo, the Italian club's vice president Adriano Galliani has been quoted as saying.

"I can confirm that talks are taking place ... I won't say anything more," Galliani was quoted as saying by Italian news agency ANSA when asked about speculation that Rivaldo could be heading to AC Milan.

English Premier League bigspenders Manchester United and Newcastle United manager Bobby Robson, who has made no secret of his admiration for the player, are also likely to be keeping a close eye on developments.

The players who won the 1998 World Cup and Euro 2000 for France will form the backbone of the national squad for the Euro 2004 qualifiers, new coach Jacques Santini has said.

"Why should I change everything? Have you heard of a top player or a top team who never failed?," Santini was quoted as saying in France Football magazine.

"Most of the players who will play the qualifying games will be the players who competed in the last international tournaments."

Santini, 50, was named last Friday as successor to Roger Lemerre, who was sacked after France's disastrous first round exit at last month's World Cup.

Super Eagles Adapting to time job available

AFP, Abuja

The Nigeria Football Association (NFA) on Tuesday advertised a vacancy for the position of a local chief coach for the national squad, the Super Eagles.

Three weeks ago the NFA announced they would hire a foreign technical adviser for all its national teams while keeping a local chief coach for the Super Eagles.

Under the arrangement, the foreign technical adviser will be the chief coach's superior.

All applications for the position of chief coach should be submitted to the NFA not later than July 26 and interviews will take place at the federation secretariat in Lagos on August 2, according to the statement signed by the NFA secretary general Taiwo Ogunjobi.

The candidate must not be less than 40 years old, have coaching certificates, attended coaching courses and seminars and have 10 years post-qualification experience.

There has been speculation that former Super Eagles coach, Adegboye Onigbinde, is interested in the job.

Football REUTERS, Madrid Barcelona's decision to release Brazilian forward Rivaldo with a vear remaining on his contract may have had more to do with his personal relationship with coach Louis van Gaal than the club's desire to save money. Barca announced a surplus of just over dollars 7 million as they presented their annual accounts on Monday, the day after they had controversially agreed to give a free transfer to their best player.

The budget for next season is down eight percent, however, and recent transfer dealings offer a stark picture of the changing financial landscape in Spain, as a club renowned for high spending has been forced into a belt-tightening exercise

In 1997, when van Gaal began his first spell in charge at the Catalan giants, the club shelled out over dollars 65 million to sign seven players, while another dollars 40 million was spent in 1998 and dollars 28 million in 1999.

In 2000, the club banked dollars 56 million from the sale of Luis Figo to Real Madrid but spent more than dollars 80 million in a massive rebuilding programme. That was followed by an even bigger outlay of dollars 90 million 12 months ago, as another seven players were signed axe seven players from the squad. from Lazio. Rivaldo had a huge row with van Gaal over the coach's tactical formation back in 1999 and few doubt that the main reason behind the Brazilian's departure is the pair's poor relationship. The decision will have the added benefit of saving Barcelona salary costs estimated in some newspapers to be as high as dollars 12 million for just one season.

The club have also given free transfers this summer to two more high earners, the Spanish international defenders Sergi and Abelardo.

Barcelona are not the only club to have been unusually subdued in the transfer market.

Barcelona, meanwhile, added drinks manufacturers Coca-Cola and Damm to their list of main sponsors over the summer, deals that will bring in 12 million euros.

The rest of Spain's First Division clubs are currently negotiating a new deal for TV rights to run from 2003.

According to recent reports in Spain, that new agreement is likely to net the remaining 18 clubs between dollars 240 million and dollars 300 million a season, around the same level they currently receive.

With uncertainty still surrounding the issue, though, most clubs are exercising caution in the transfer market.

A recent survey in sports daily As suggested that spending is down around 60 percent from last year, with only Atletico Madrid and Deportivo Coruna laying out significant sums.

Atletico paid around dollars 15 million to bring in Javi Moreno from AC Milan, while Deportivo have spent over dollars 20 million on Paraguayan midfielder Roberto Acuna and Portuguese centre-back Jorge Andrade.

Arsenal manager Arsene Wenger believes that Manchester United paid well over the odds for England defender Rio Ferdinand.

"They have bought a great player but they have paid a high price for him," he told tonight's London Evening Standard, initiating another bout of verbal pugilism. "I'd like to sign Rio Ferdinand - but for £10m less.

In stark contrast to his great rival Alex Ferguson, Wenger has spent just £2.1m on a central defender -Pascal Cygan from Lille. "When you have a lot of money in your pocket you buy expensive. And that's what they have done," Wenger said.
