Drik celebrates its 13th anniversary

O celebrate its thirteenth anniversary Drik holds a week-long exhibition which opened on 4th September. In it are the photographs of Drik, Pathshala, Out of Focus and Mukto Chokh. The pictures are in black and white as well as in colour. They mostly highlight the work of young photographers who had made a mark in the recent past.

Nasir Mahmood has a collection of girls standing in a line and speaking to a passerby while watching something in progress. The girls wear "shalwar- kameez" and are seen in red. pink and brown. The branches of trees have come into focus while the background is black. His other picture shows a woman bearing a pot which is covered and tied with sheaves of paddy. She flaunts a red sari with yellow motifs to match with her yellow blouse. Other human beings are brought in the background in blue ,black, beige and red. With her "teep" and nose ring the subject appears content with life. Syed Farouqi's picture shows a man welding on the riverside with the streaks and loops of sparks flowing in one direction. The streaks are in gold and red while the background is black. Apart from the silhouette of the worker is the outline of a ship on the river bank. The sky is a band of mauve and dull orange while the land is in purple, blue and Wasif's photography has a lot of action with a woman in front and others bending over towards her or kneeling at the sides and in front . The images are mainly in orange and blue depicting the garments while the faces are beige and has been inspired by stage acting. In another picture by Wasif we see another picture of the theatre people with men holding candles. This is in orange, blue, pink and black. Mausumi has brought in the "biscope" where young women and children in bright clothes have gathered to be entertained. The shed from where the images are being shown is decorated with gay colours of blue and yellow for the occasion of Pahila Baishak. The hazy background brings in trees and human beings. The interest the young viewers in the images from small openings is well captured. Snigdha brings in a scene from a play in which there is a man waving a wand and he flaunts a headband . At his back is a drummer and more people in the dark background. The figures are in brown, red, beige and black.

Abdul Malik Babul's "Song of morning fog" shows a lot of people pushing carts loaded with green vegetables to be taken to the market to be sold. The men are wrapped in shawls and mufflers although their legs seen in smaller proportions. The effect of the fog is included in the picture against the black sky to make it interesting . Babul's "Folktale of noon" shows lengths of dyed clothes put out to dry with the background of a mustard field and a girl seen sitting against it. The long lengths of cloth appear like some rivulets flowing from the field. His "Moonlight heaven" brings in some cows with their

bring in women with their cattle seen against the sky in shades of gray. As they stand on a vast field, the background of low trees are also included in the composition.

One is lucky enough to find Dr. Shahidul Alam's pictures included in the display. These include the portrait of a girl. She has a striped sari, earrings and a nose ring and these combined with her delightful face present a charming picture of the rural inhabitants. This is in black and calves along with the men tending them. This is in gold and brown and where the streaks of water come in there is greenish black. The cows are either brown or white.

Md. Mainuddin's picture show fishermen carrying their wickerwork fishing implements, fishing nets and bent poles attached to the nets. The men appear in black, gray or shades or white wearing hitched up "lungis" and singlets. The bits of bent bamboo from a design against the brown and beige sky. Mainuddin's other picture white. Another is based in Jafflong and shows men collecting boulders and pebbles for building. Boats and people are seen against the stones. With the sun shining on the subjects, the picture is beautiful in presenting a simple theme of men at work. In his third picture we see the sun rising against long strips of land intersected by water. There are two boats quite close to the ground while bamboo shoots stick out lending interest. The sky is a pale gray while the water is even a paler shade of the same tint while the land appears black. Akash brings in how the

"hijras" long for amusement like everybody else and in one picture the "hijra" leader is shown blessing a new baby according to traditions. Another shows one them called "Aarzoo" being challenged by some of the onlookers in jest. "Rupa", another "hijra" is shown dancing in the festival of "Kali puja" Akash adds the comment that it is common for people to invite the "hijras" to liven their private parties. Here the dancer has on a striped skirt of orange, red, green and black. Under the fairy lights the people hold out their hands to the "hijra". In yet another picture we see three such "hijras" waiting during the "Kali puja". They have earrings, bangles, necklaces, lipstick, blouses and "dupattas".

Another lot of display of Akash's expertise includes the image of a banana raft which is the only means of communication in Narayanganj where roads had gone underwater during the floods. Along with the picture of the man paddling the raft are the houses and trees in the backdrop with the water rising up high. There is a homeless man who is sleeping on a bench with the floodwaters all around him. In another picture we see a tailor with his sewing machine with the water surrounding him. He is sleeping as he has no work to do with the gray water swirling under him. In another of Akash's pictures we see people waiting with pails and metal containers waiting to collect fresh drinking water. Akash had got the rare opportunity to show his work at the World Press exhibition and some of the pictures that he had used to win this chance has been exhibited at Drik during the occasion of its anniversary.

Refanur Akhter Molly, who belongs to the Out of Focus group shows a man bending over some pieces of tin to do welding work. This is shades of gray and yellow while the smoke is blue against a background of orange and black. Biraj, who belongs to the Mukto Chok group, brings in the image of a pedestrian whose movements are so quick that we see him in a whirl in shades of gray. In the background cars and rickshaws are seen whizzing by, also in gray. The landmarks of the houses and posters remain clear in the backdrop. In Biraj's other picture we see the water festival in Rangamati where people play with water and wet each other. Pishlu of Pathshala brings in the play of neon lights in our markets in orange, blue, green, yellow and purple. There is a man seen against it held in a rectangular frame of black.

Debog Proto Das brings in the Hill Tracts women with their heavy silver jewellery in his photo. The women's bracelets go from their wrists to their elbows, they flaunt chunky earrings and have flowers in their hair. At the back is a fenced off area. In Das's "Nangar" we see a lot of coloured boats on the sea beach against the sky. They are painted green, red and orange and fly bright flags while people are seen resting by the boats. Shoab Frougui brings in another picture from Chittagong and this woman has heavy jewellry even around her waist. As she cleans the rice, she is bare on her chest although she has a cloth on her hair and she sports a "lungi" like apparel. This is in brown, gray, blue and The exhibition along with the celebration with the giant cake brought a festive mood to the Drik premises. The photos did a good job of projecting the careful and clever work of some of the young photographers of Bangladesh.

PICK OF THE DAY

Young guns On HBO at 9:30 p.m.

Propelled by a rock 'n' roll soundtrack and populated by a handful of hot young Hollywood actors, "Young Guns" is a Western for the MTV generation. Set in 1870s New Mexico, it follows the career of six juvenile delinquents hired to defend the ranch of a British cattle baron. When the rancher is killed by town officials, the boys rebel dysfunctional outcasts Nancy, Bonnie and Rochelle against the powers-that-be by transforming themselves -- and discovers that they, like her, can perform "the into a band of outlaws led by none other than Billy the
