The simple but pristine world of the cloudy peaks

Mozharul Hoq's solo at Zainul gallery depicts tribal life at its best

AZIZ AMIRUL

ONE is spellbound by the serene beauty of Mother Nature, as one watches photos, 41 in all, by Mozharul Hoq Monju, at Zainul Gallery at Fine Arts Institute. This is the third solo exhibition of the amateur photographer, titled, 'Track to Keokradang', a natural location, the highest recorded peak inside the country, in Chittagong Hill Tracts.

"Accompanying a trekkers' group, I had recently reached the peak of Keokradang; took photographs of the people and of nature while passing adjoining regions and localities on way to Keokradang. I had been able to fully explore and understand the simple, genuine life-styles of the local communities, especially of members of the Baum tribe", says Monju, while he gives an introduction of the source of his works.

Monju seems to delve deep into the social bearing of the Baum people, while he provides an eloquent touch to his works through accretion of subjects, those of flora and fauna, to complete that special artistic tone. Mother Nature herself turns an artist, craftsman and an architect as the photographs bring in certain subtle and intricate feelings in the viewers' mind through perfect angular depictions of subjects, as well, the settings. A number of the exhibits present panoramic view of the vast hilly landscapes and beautiful lakes around, with floating clouds overhead resembling loaded sacks of spongy cotton.

The close-up portrait of the smoker in 'Delight: Sorrow flies away' elucidates a tiresome laborious daily life and a resonant relaxation of the honest individual, a representative of the greater community, at the end of a day. Captioned, 'Universal: Beauty has no race', highlights a young member of the locality, one who reveals an almost complete traditional ornamentation of the group. A pair of large, red ear-balls, a white headband and a bunch of violet floral embellishment upon the crown give the girl a look of rich nobility, something inherited from her ancestors.

'Bondage: Nature and man inseparable' is a particular piece that reflects brightness of the sun's rays, quite unmatched in style, with most of the other exhibits. A strange yet captivating sparkle shines off the subject of the bromide, providing a sense of total reality.

Captions like 'Adolescence: Approaching with its enigma', 'Life: What really is it?', and the series, 'Generations- 1 & 2', strike the viewer's conscience with the topic of birth, childhood, aging etc. A contrasting scenario of the life cycle is presented through the depiction of a number of human beings in the photographs. They broadly differ, both in age and taste.

A few of the photographs show the group in which Monju had the expedition, their frequent struggles and hardship while trying to cross steep footpaths and murky streams on the way. 'Ascend: Nothing's gonna stop us now' and 'Worship: remembering the 'almighty'', gives an opportunity to the viewer to go real close to subjects, like wild herbs, plants and ritualistic stones of the tribal people, most of which, otherwise, remain out of sight of the commoner.

'Endless falls' and 'Edge of darkness' turn out to be two of the more significant presentations by Monju among which the detecting eye is able to discover a kind of slightly semi-abstract and unworshiply existence. The sense of beauty in the two never ceases, rather proliferates through uncommonness.

As the photographer feels, 'The job was truly a difficult one but at the end it turned out quite pleasant due to the enchanting beauty of the greenery. As I understood, the people of the region were the most important part of my subject, their life-style and humanitarian qualities, of which we were simply amazed'. The generosity shown by the community, as Monju observes, is rare in our greater urban society. 'Is the air in our modern environment fresher than the one found in the pristine mountains? Are our minds and souls richer and cleaner than those possessed by the people in the mountains?', he wonders in solitude. Monju started photography since the early 90s and held his first solo exhibition in 1995 at the National Museum gallery entitled, 'Women and commercial activities'. His second solo was held the following year with mixed subjects at the Fine Arts Institute.

The current exhibition remains open daily from 3 to 7 p.m. and also from 10 a.m. to 12 noon on Friday, till September 30.

Photographs of Monju cover a wide range of subjects of the tribals

TODAY'S HIGHLIGHTS

HBO: 12:00 p.m. House on haunted hill. Billionaire theme-park mogul Steven Price arranges his wife's birthday bash in a torture chamber the Cannacut Psychiatric Institute for the Criminally Insane, where horrifying experiments were conducted on those unlucky enough to get sent there. He makes a deadly proposition, and five contestants, doomed from the start, stand to earn a million bucks if they're still standing by the time the night is through.
HALLMARK: 10:00 p.m. Ruby's Bucket Of Blood. Everyone hangs out at Ruby's juke joint on Saturday nights. People go there to drink and listen to music, but no one knows about Ruby Delacroix's secret love affair and her forbidden passion for a white musician in the Deep South during the sweltering summer of 1961.

PICK OF THE DAY

Ginger Snaps
On HBO at 10:00 p.m.
Ginger Fitzgerald and Brigitte Fitzgerald are not normal sisters. Aged 16 and 15 respectively, they both have vowed to die together and both are late for their periods. But the full moon night that Ginger finally does get her first period, she's also bitten by a werewolf. Sure enough, changes begin to happen to her body and temperament.
