The body had rolls of pleats all over and AHADI Masud's ceramics was painted in loops of brown, burnt exhibition at the Zainul sienna, white with blue dots and a Gallery was an interesting base of brown, indigo and white, one indeed. There was a pottery The twist in the shape of the pottery with blue motifs on top with variaat the two sides lent a new angle to tions of the hue. Below it were patsuch ceramic creations. terns of blue and brown in horizontal Mahadi's studio pottery-3, stoneware was a delightful creation of a vessel with a neck decorated with indigo and beige flat leaf-like motifs. Leaves or waves of water covered the top of the vessel and appeared to be dripping down against a base of beige and indigo Patterns like simplified peacock tails were found at the base. Potterv-4 was like a bottle that was made with pleats of ceramic once again and had an elongated neck in shades of blue. The body itself had patterns of lines and triangles in pale blue set against indigo blue. While the side contained a stripe the bottom held a bar in light blue. This vase-like piece could be a domestic decoration and could hold objects like flowers or peacock feathers to decorated the niches.

Made of stone ware, studio pottery-5 was again a glazed piece in dark blue and beige that burnt like gold. Here the neck was as high as the body with the neck opening up like a flower. The main body swirled out in an irregular circle containing bulging stripes formed into the intrinsic shape of the body. While there was indigo at the upper portion of the body there was beige at the bottom. Imagination and skill had worked together to form these shapes cm in height. It had swirling and zigzag motifs in blue and beige against indigo while the neck had white large dots that stood out of the base. The body appeared pressed at one end but otherwise rectangular with a large flower motif done with rows of circle for the centre and enveloping petals in a circles of beige and white. At one side were tiny beige and white lines added to the dark blue base. Similarly dramatic and decorative was studio pottery-7(stoneware, of 22 cm in height) which contained motifs in the form of weaving circles in aquamarine, beige and white on the backdrop of indigo while the stoneware appeared once again pleated This jar too was not totally symmetrical as it slightly tilted to one side.

Equally fascinating was

Mahadi's studio potterv-6 which was again of stoneware, and of 27

One was faced with a striped stoneware in studio pottery-8 which was 24 cm in height. Here simple horizontal bars of beige and mauve along with ones of indigo and gray completed the simple but sophisticated shape of the container which appeared basically like a jar that appeared like an open solidified sack that had been pinched in one end. This too was elegant despite its stark simplicity. One found more gray and beige in studio pottery-9(stoneware, 32 cm in height) with its elongated ends at the top and designs of loops and scallops along with loops, dots, bars and lines in 3-D forms that stood out from the base

Just as fascinating and intriguing was the stone pottery 10(stoneware and 27 cm in height) which brought in a vessel with a body that was decorated with large loops and triangles of grained blue seen against a backdrop of golden beige. The neck was indigo with subtle scallops of white. Studio pottery-11 (stoneware, and 28cm in height) was an ornate jar with intricate motifs of circles, loops, lines bars and waves in indigo and beige again. The jar bulged out at the sides and had a base. Its opening at the top had a beige bar. This was interesting but perhaps not as interesting as the rest of the entries.

This is an expensive medium and despite interest artists cannot always arrange a solo display of this nature. Practical Magic On HBO at 10:00 p.m.

Sally and Gillian hardly ever stick to conventions. They eat chocolate for breakfast, they stay up late and for recreation, they study spell books. Witchcraft, Magic, Hocus Pocus. It is a legacy that's been passed from generation to generation and mainly used on men. But this skill comes at a price, as the men they fall in love with are doomed to an untimely death.
