Art works that were "jeuns" but "jolis"

Exhibit of 18 young artists at the Russian Cultural Centre

HE Russian Cultural Centre had once again a superb collection of the works of young promising artists at its gallery recently. This included the eye catching works of Nazia Andaleeb Preema, Nadeem Islam, Deepa Islam, Nusrat Jehan and thirteen other promising artists who presented several different styles and themes.

"Boat' by Nazi Andaleeb Preema, oil on canvas, presented a vermilion boat, touched with blue, black and yellow with a figure sketched in. It had a large and luminous yellow moon to balance the composition at the back. The rest of the canvas was in shades of blue and green to depict a waterscape at night with minimal strokes where the water and the sky were both in shades of indigo and paler blue. Touches of yellow green and black and a splash of vermilion lent drama to the delineation and to usher in the element of movement of the boat. In Andaleeb's "Ractim onubhoti" we saw variations of red spread over the entire canvas without bringing in any element of ennui. The ruby red held a disc of gold moon while texture work in pink, brown and black was added to lend interest to the composition. While the rest of the canvas had the scintillating red there was dark blue and black on the right hand top and the left end bottom. Touches of pink were added here and there to add interest and harmony.

Nadeem Islam Kamrul's "Lingering memory", oil on canvas, had figures seen standing and sitting which depicted women, men, children in various colours such as brown, red, white, blue and these hues appeared to blend and glide into one another. The variety of colours ran a riot emanating from brown, and ranging on to blue and red. The people in the painting had apparently gathered together to sit, relax and enjoy themselves. The sky had been brought in the backdrop while the forefront had been done in blue too with mixing and mingling of

In Matia Banu Shuku's woodcut print one saw the bottom half of trunks of trees in black against yellow and green, presented in simplified geometrical manner. Their shadows appeared to fall in front in the water forming parallel lines and brining in the water pool in front. Whirls of pale gray and blue brought the overhead sky in beige against a pale blue-gray backdrop. In Matia's other woodcut print we came across images which could have been those of cacti with their offshoots in gray and black and modified into simplified rectangles and circles put together with yellow streaks at the back. To the left was brought the swirl of the sun in faded gray and white. The landscape in woodcut bv Farzana Ahmed Urmi brought in a tree at the side in black, blue, yellow with the autumn fallen leaves piling in front. There was a house at the side which had the same colour as the fallen leaves, tree trunk and the lawn in front. The two-storied house had open windows inviting in the nature and this was in shades of gray to relive the monotony of the yellow and pale green found in the rest of the work. Farzana's still life in wood cut brought the traditional collection of bottles of wine and jars containing paint brushes, small boxes with a beaded necklace hanging down from it and other nick knacks set up against a plush cloth. This is in shades of beige, greenish black and has checked and flecked forms in the composition along with experimentation with the texture. An oil on canvas, "My pet" by Roksana Parvin, was perhaps a depiction of a cat going by suggestions in the total abstraction. One saw masses of gray and yellow touched with red. To it was added emerald and egret white while at the back was more vellow and red while in front were little splotches of gray. Bold streaks of vermilion ran all throughout the canvas.

'Karaniganj' by Ruhul Karim Rumee

"Nari", a dry point print by Kamruzzaman Shagor presented a seated woman which was done in a realistic manner . She wore the sari in an old fashioned way with long sleeves and as she looked ahead the work had a photographic effect Kamruzzaman's "Old man".

'Relation' by Nusrat Jahan

with furrows on the forehead, sporting a muffler on his head and warm clothes. Another work with the same title by the same painter brought in an old figure with his head wrapped. The cobweb like sketches at the back highlighted the figure in front. This was all in gray, white and beige. The same artist's "Pagla", yet another dry point also had had beard and had on a "lungi", necklace of beads. In the background of the chair on which he sat, of which only a part was depicted, were sketches like the weaving of a net. His "Rest" brought in once again an old man as the subject with other men resting him talking amongst themselves. He carried a stick in his hand and beside him was a drooping figure.

The tempera on paper by Nusrat Jahan's "Relation showed a lot of leaves and roots intermingling with one another. These were done in brown, black. mauve, shades of yellow and beige. The floating leaves and the thick roots were gently settling on the ground. This was guite picturesque and meaningful. The detailed work was also admirable. These had been worked upon with tiny dots. Nusrat's "Relation-2". again a tempera on paper. showed twirling, gliding and sliding figures intermingling with each other like some roots of trees. These had been outlined with brown and had scallops of more brown on top with layer upon layers of colours with one floating into another in beige, yellow, blue and purple. There was the moon on top and tiny dotted stars to complete the creation.

A water colour "Shokal" by Deepa Islam, was oriental art and brought in a woman flaunting a sari, bangles and long tresses. The details of her face had been done with loving care. She was looking up at a singing myna bird, done with flecks of black, blue and white, which was singing in the garden behind her of which the vellow flower and leaves had also been included in the painting. The figure was in brown while the sari is in shades of pink while her cascading hair was bluish completing a picturesque presentation of paints. In Deepa's other water colour piece one found a similar presentation of a gorgeous woman done in minute details. Her jewellery and clothes received a similar delicate and detailed treatment. Her brown skin and burnt umber hair managed to stand out against the darker set-Golam Dastagir's work was done in the naïve school manner with crayons. One looked like a doll with circular eves and a trianale like dress. Another figure appeared to be an assembling of potatoes with tiny scrawny hands sticking out from nowhere. Another portrayal of a girl had tiny limbs done in black and green. Two triangles went into the depiction of yet another figure and it had an eye lodged on top. They were all labelled as "Future childhood". He added in an attached label. "Are children going to be mechanised? There will be no difference between the machines and the innocence of childhood."

In contrast were the refreshing water colour by Ruhul Karim Rumee as in "Karanigaj" with the boats done in soft washes of soothing brown, yellow . In the backdrop the village has been brought in shades of green ,topaz, light ruby pink and burnt sienna along with impressions of passersby. People had been included in the boat as well. The river in front had been included in swishes of subtle gray and green. Rumee said that the "magic of art" in him was inspired first by nature. He added that when he first entered the Fine Arts Institute it was the natural environment that caught his attention rather than other routine academic work.

Faiza Faria Ahmed"s "Suffocation" in mixed media introduced a human figure done with blue and gray thread with a flower on its body with sheets of copper on the hands. A sliver of another metal. probably copper, a chain of paperclips went all through it. Also included was a strip of metal with holes in it which was included in the depiction of the body.

Some of the entries in the exhibition were fairly thought provoking although they were the works of artists who were still students at the Fine Arts Institute. Others brought in realism which was a relief from so much of abstraction that is flooding the galleries and which confounds the average viewer unless the artist is at hand to explain his/her work.
