The portrait of a man is seen in the 2nd prize winner, Tarun Kumar Sarkar's "After seventeen years" which presents a figure seen down to the chest done in shades of blue. vellow and red. Dots. stripes and rectangular forms along with semicircles for eyes and two white bars for lips and a beige conical nose placed on a daffodil vellow face are included in the portraiture. The cube of blue one paled over another, with vet another blue rectangle containing dots in deeper shades and a burst of colour at the end complete the composition with its indigo corpse of a tiger with its muscles and bones of its entire body, done in shades of blue, gray and white with a careful eye for detail so that the impact is dramatic indeed. The figure stands on a pedestal of gray and blue supported by three gray, blue and white narrow bars, while the face appears to be in a flowing rectangles of red and gray flames. The backdrop of indigo blue and burnt umber highlight the figure so that the work is a remarkable indeed. Safin, born in 1974, is at present an MFA student of DU. He says about his work," this is a living corpse of a tiger, walking on the way of catharsis to find out a far reaching destination, wherein, only the gray and black. The impact is a dynamic one indeed, specially when one concentrates on the details of the texture work and the ovular and global motifs that combine with the sliding, gliding images. The contrast of colours are soothing yet buoyant and passionate and poetic. The outlines with bold black of some of the forms lend more lyricism to the composition. Tapan says, "We are all moving towards an unknown destiny at the time when social reality is synonymous to the mechanical world. We struggle to reach the final destination keeping in mind the dilemma of differences Although origination from different direction, we are heading towards a the Russian Art Institute, along with those at other foreign cultural centre galleries in the city. The older and more experienced artists have their contacts and patrons and for the younger generation, it is more than the encouragement of the teachers at the Fine Arts Institute DU and CU along with their friends and families that will one day propel them to the top. The display provides venue for the opportunity to see and admire the works of numerous adventurous young painters and the prizes including six of them, should go far to egg on the less experienced

High above, in the background, is the top of a glazed window taken from colonial times. The sky is a golden orange with intermittent gray clouds and more puffy ones in white and shades of biscuit colour. At the bottom one finds a rectangular bar of cobalt blue touched with geometrical shapes of green, orange, red and bronze. The subject is set on a background of white which are held together by the two panels on the top and bottom. The impact is neat and soothing as well as thought provoking. known as traditional. I strive to come out of the traditional boundaries. This time it is the same with my work. Self realization eggs me on to paint. it is not just the pleasure of using idioms which I've learnt academically but the comprehension of beauty of nature on my own. I've learnt the grace and inherent rhythm of music that is the world of my visual language.'

The exhibition at Zainul Gallery depicted well the varied talent and imagination of the younger generation of painters, who have vet to make a name for themselves at home and overseas.
